PROFITTEERING IN FOOD STUFF IS STILL UNDER BAN

Food Administrator Page Announces That Violators of Food Rules and Regulations Will Be Put Out of Business. Definite Margins Fixed on Products

Raleigh, Nov. 27.—Would-be food profiteers who have judged that the signing of the armistice will release them from the watchful eye of the Food Administration have a surprise in store. State Food Administrator Henry A. Page declared today that while a number of the rules and regulations of the Food Administration have been removed and others may be removed later, those relating to margins of profit and to the distribution of food and feedstuffs will not only remain in force until the Peace Treaty is signed but that they will be more rigidly enforced hereafter than they have been in the past.

Profiteering and speculation will be punished ruthlessly. Voluntary contributions to the Red Cross will no longer be accepted in lieu of more drastic actions. Merchants who are found to be willfully disregarding food rules and regulations, especially those relating to margins of profit, will be put out of business until normal times come again.

In line with this policy the Food Administration has fixed specific margins upon an increased number of food products. These margins are absolute and any merchant who exceeds them will be subject to discipline by the Food Administrator. The products upon which margins have been fixed and the margins thereon are as follows:

Table with 3 columns: Item, Cash & Carry, Credit & Delivery. NEW ATTITUDE TOWARD HEALTH

A Basic Change That May Result From the Medical Attention Given the Men in the Army and Navy

By R. B. Wilson

North Carolina State Board of Health

There has been much said and written with regard to a changed attitude on the part of the people generally toward religious matters as a result of the war, and undoubtedly there will be a deepening of the spirituality of the peoples of all the countries of the world; that there will also quite a number of changes in thought toward many other problems of life is also admitted by those who have given the reconstruction period any degree of thought.

One of these basic changes is suggested in a letter written by Lieutenant Colonel Charles O'Hagan Laughinghouse, of Greenville, N. C., a member of the State Board of Health who is now serving in command of Base Hospital No. 85 with the American Expeditionary Forces, located in Paris. This suggested change is that of a new attitude on the part of the people generally toward matters of health. The fact that the health of the men in the army has been given a place of first importance is the basis for Colonel Laughinghouse's suggestion; that when these men return to their homes and again undertake the duties of civil life, they will not be content with the present methods of handling public health.

In other words, Colonel Laughinghouse suggests that the question of health matters being taken over as a whole by the State and Federal government, and the practice of medicine even subsidized, may be one of the results that will eventuate.

Writing to Dr. W. S. Rankin, Secretary State Board of Health, Colonel Laughinghouse says:

"Have you thought that American soldiers having been carefully treated, having been subjected to scientific methods of diagnosis, blood counts, fauces and urine analysis x-rays, etc., etc., will, after the war, in all probability refuse to submit to a medical service that is inferior to what the army has given them?"

"Have you thought that they may become teachers of the doctrine that laymen are not capable of deciding on their doctor; that if vaccination is for the good of the many that the same idea ought to hold good even to the subsidizing of medicine entirely?"

"I hear it is not from medical men, but from civilians, or rather soldiers, that I am not quite comfortable until I whisper it to you in order that you may look out for our rural State and think seriously on the question of group practice."

"I met an American colonel who is attached to the British and American army in the capacity of Liaison officer between the British and the United States. He tells me that he is very intimate with the 30th Division, A. E. F.; that it is made up largely of North Carolina Soldiers. It made me feel good to hear what he had to say about them. Quoting him: 'They are the picked men in the Division; they don't know fear; to win the war is their job, and they are taking this job seriously. They keep their heads; they know what they are here for; they are clean mind, fine fellows, and they habitually lead the way. His remarks gave me such a great big heart throb that I have to write it home to you.'

"I have met several of the boys in the hospitals here. They are bright, hopeful, determined, and anxious to get well and get back in the line. One of them is in my hospital convalescing from a compound fracture of his radius. I was talking to him Friday. He said: 'This thing is getting well mighty damn slow. Can't we wrap it up in something and let me go on back in the line? I want to get back. If I stays here too long, my captain might think I was faking and the folks might think just 'cause I got hit I got skeered.' God bless his simple, honest manhood and courage."

"We may be a provincial people, but the more I see of other people, the finer I find the North Carolinian. He can invite comparison confidently. I would not dare write you such stuff except, knowing as I do and appreciating what you have done for the State's average man, I felt that good news from your charges over here might gladden your heart a bit."

"Do everything you can for the average man. The more intimately I know him, the greater I admire him, so much so that I have become to believe that North Carolina's average man needs only the environment to make him great."

"I have been here since September 26, and am very busy getting my hospital in shape. Have already 412 patients, and am preparing to care for 1500 more. It would take a book to write you details. The days are flying by, and I am working late into the night."

To Our Customers:

On account of conditions caused by the war, manufacturers and jobbers have made their terms on a thirty (30) day basis. We will be unable to continue doing business as we have in the past, so after December first all goods bought on open account will become due on the first of each month, and we will expect settlement not later than the fifth.

We shall continue to sell some agricultural implements and take note settlement when delivered. Musical goods will be sold on usual terms. This is no reflection on our customers whatsoever, but one of the conditions imposed on us by the war.

Thanking you for the many years of favorable patronage, we remain, is "a-howling" about what it calls personal government" and other like rot.

Allow me to dip into a little history—and I shall give my authority—Horace White, who might have disputed with Horace Greely for the distinction of greatest journalist in the republican party every produced in his "Life of Lyman Trumbull" who might have disputed with William Pitt Fessenden for the distinction of greatest Senator the Republican party has ever produced.

In 1860 Abraham Lincoln could not have been nominated for President unless his manager in the convention bought the Pennsylvania delegation in Republican national convention. There had to be an excuse for it, and what do you suppose it was? Why, that William H. Seward as Governor of New York, had hobbled with the Catholic church and the Know-Nothings of Pennsylvania would not vote for him if nominated. That was for the public to hear and cogitate upon. But what was the real consideration of the trade? Why, that old Simon Cameron should be Secretary of War in Lincoln's cabinet. David Davis, who represented Mr. Lincoln in that convention, made the trade because he was an expert and accomplished practical politician and knew that was the only way to land his man, and it was done.

And behold, Mr. Lincoln found that when he came to make up his cabinet, the War Department was mortgaged to Cameron. He kicked like all the oxen in Texas, was as indignant as he was surprised; but the honor of David Davis prevailed. Lincoln was a high-minded man and could not go back on Davis. Yet he sought a way out, and demanded of Cameron that he should have the endorsement of "Seward's friends." Cameron got that endorsement, counter-signed by Thurlow Weed, Seward's master. And thus Cameron was made Secretary of War to the surprise of a heap of intelligent folks.

Weed went on his mission and discharged it admirably. He was a wonderful man. He made John Quincy Adams, William Henry Harrison, and Zachary Taylor president of the United States, and pretty nearly put William H. Seward in that exalted place. It is, perhaps, due to say that he had colleagues on the mission that Lincoln entrusted him with. And who do you think they were? They were drafted from what I shall do violence to the language to say were the hierarchy—Henry Ward Beecher, a New England Puritan, Archbishop Hughes, a New York Catholic, and Bishop McMillane, an Ohio Episcopalian. All these had a roving commission from Abraham Lincoln to go to Europe to use their eyes and ears for him.

Of all the "constructive criticism" that ever was ordered from a disordered mind, this Republican complaint about the missions of Col. House takes the cake for stupidity.—Savoyard in News and Observer.

and to the grief of a heap of honest folks among the latter Lincoln himself.

The war came on. Government contracts were as thick as fleas in Mexico. In one contract awarded by Cameron Thurlow Weed drew out of the treasury $50,000 in cash and had never risked one five cents in the enterprise. It became a public scandal and a chief moving cause for the dismissal of Cameron.

Now listen, Mr. Lincoln wanted to know what public opinion in Europe was, and he knew that of all the men at his command Thurlow Weed was the best fitted to find it out and tell him about it and he acted on the Machiavellian principle. "Many a full sack comes from a crooked-rev, and he that would be captain of none but honest men will have small hire to pay." And so he constituted Thurlow Weed his personal representative to go to Europe to "spy out the land." Of course that sort of thing was excellent in Lincoln; but it is execrable in Wilson, though Lincoln's agent had had his hand up to the elbow in the United States treasury, grabbing the graft, and Wilson's agent has never seen the United States Treasury?
