Voting will take place between the hours of 4 and 7:30 o'clock. At this time it is not thought the present officials will have opposition and the primary will pass quietly. The present administration here does not seem to be much opposition to their re-election. BARNES-KIRBY J. H. ORPHANAGE CHILDREN WARMLY GREETED HERE The Concert Monday Evening Was Heard by Capacity House. About $600 Raised. The Oxford Orphanage Singing Class gave a most delightful concert at the Metropolitan Opera House Monday evening. The children were greeted by a capacity house, the largest crowd, perhaps, that has gathered in the local play house in many months. Some time before the hour for the curtain to rise, every available seat in the house had been taken, and while the local Masonic Orchestra was rendering its introductory selections, many more assembled and filled the aisles. The program rendered by the children exceeded the splendid standard they have maintained for the past several seasons. The opening chorus, "A Song of Spring," convinced those present they had a treat in store as the class sang as though it was inspired by the many faces before it. And each selection following was received with rounds of applause. Showing the appreciation and interest of the audience. Particularly interesting was the last half of the program, which followed several short talks and appropriate selections by the orchestra. The patriotic songs (in the hearts of the vast audience, which cheered each selection enthusiastically. The program could be added to, but it would be hard to make it more effective. The songs and recitations were beautiful and were delivered in an admirable manner. During the intermission, Rev. J. M. Daniel, pastor of the Methodist church, addressed the assemblage briefly, telling of the great work being done by the Masonic Lodges of North Carolina through the Orphanage and in various other ways. He was indeed complimentary in his remarks relative to the local Lodge, stating that it was the most enthusiastic organization of its kind in this section and the only Masonic Lodge in North Carolina, to his knowledge, that had its own orchestra of trained musicians. He was followed by Mr. L. W. Alderman, manager of the singing class, who thanked the people of Dunn for their liberal response on this occasion. He said he always enjoyed his visits to Dunn, as did the children of the Orphanage, and was more than pleased on this occasion to be here. He, too, spoke briefly of the magnificent work and intense enthusiasm of Palmyra Lodge. McD. Holliday, Chairman of the Orphanage Committee, was then called on to make a statement. He stated in a few words a great deal of the work of the Orphanage, and immediately called on the audience for contributions. He said the names of those who contributed $5.00 or more, would constitute an honor roll, which would be published, that all might know who were the supporters of this great institution. His appeal met with a generous response and $288.05 was raised in this manner. This amount was supplemented by the door receipts which amounted to $203.20. Total receipts were $491.25. Following is a list of those who contributed $5.00 or more: W. R. Howard, Jesse M. Wilson, B. E. Jackson, T. V. Smith, J. E. Crockett, D. R. Lewis, J. S. Farthing, A. E. Sartz, E. L. Crockett, E. L. CHAPLAIN ELLIS TELLS OF TRIP (Continued from page 1) speed. We had the most daring chauffeur and I have never ridden with him. The car was rounded at a forty mile rate of speed. We were fortunate to get through without a wreck. At certain points along the way we would stop that we might get in view of the sloping hills beneath us, the cities along the sea, the broad expanse of the Mediterranean, while above us were the towering mountains. We stopped for a stroll through a village on a mountain and looking in upon the building now being used for worship. A priest was sitting quietly inside before one of the magis, while at the door just inside the building sat a woman and by her was a little boy of possibly six years. He came to us with outstretched hand and when we placed some French coins in his hand he went away to her and patiently waiting for the next visitor. Of course they were professional beggars. The view from this mountain, or the hill just above this village was one of the most beautiful we had yet seen. The snow-capped Alps could be seen in the distance, several cities were visible within easy reach of the naked eye along the winding shore of the Sea, and with our glasses we could see for miles out across the historic waters with here and there a boat or a vessel moving slowly to its destination. From this village back to Nice the trip was none the less interesting. We went still higher up the mountain, across its summit and wound around on the other side as we made our way down. Here we struck snow which was some three or four feet deep. Our overcoat and wraps for which we had no use whatever down by the sea was now our salvation, with our collars turned up our gloves on, and all the wraps we could get tightly drawn about us, we rushed on through the snow, surprised by the fact that our white heads were high and which were made all the more beautiful now by the lingering rays of the setting sun. No one who has witnessed such a scene can ever forget it. It was night when we pulled up at a hotel in Nice. The day had gone off all too quickly for in the midst of such enrapturing scenery one loses all thought of time. So many times during the day I found myself wanting to stop and stand for hours in silent wonder of the day was a failure. But the day was not over, they bless us while present and linger with us as we abide in our memories long after they have passed from view. Another trip that was full of interest was one to Grasse. We took this trip by electric line which was established as being between the years 138 and 150 A. D. Of course in the earlier days of its existence it was used for gladiatorial combats, bull fights, etc. It is still used at times for bull fights, but generally for other forms of amusement. Something out of the ordinary look place here on Christmas Day, 1918. There are quite a number of American soldiers stationed in and around this place and it is one of the recognized leave places over in France. It is a "grim, gaunt ghost" of Caesar's days was chased from the old Arena, with the magic sign of the Red Triangle. 'Twas as romantic too, as anything in the olden days. In the center of the ancient Amphitheater was a huge Christmas tree electrically lighted, an American Santa Claus, singing the first Christmas song ever heard within its centuries old walls, and leading 150 soldiers in the singing of the "Star-Spangled Banner" with thousands of the citizens of Nice present. But the Arena was not the only point of interest here. Here are to be seen the "Fountain of the Nymphs" and the ancient Roman Baths. These were constructed some where about 20 B. C. The Baths and aqueducts were buried for a thousand and thirty years, were unearthed by excavators in the 18th century. Near the Baths stands the Temple of Diana; as was once thought, but now regarded as a temple connected with the neighboring baths and dedicated to the Nymphs, Pleasure, Health, etc. On the hill overlooking the city and looking down upon the harbor is the "Great Tower," called the "Tourmaigne." It has been used for a light house, signal tower, (Galish, sacred edifice, etc. The view from here overlooking the Rhone valley, and even, with glasses, the Mediterranean sea can be seen. This city also can boast of the most perfect Roman temple extant, the "Maison Carree" which is supposed to have been erected in the year 140 A. D. to Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus. It is in a wonderful state of preservation. The twenty-four hours in this city was greatly enjoyed. It was about five o'clock in the afternoon when our train came to stop on our way to Bordeaux. We missed connection at Certe so had to spend the night in this town. We found ourselves left out of doors for all the hotels were full to overflowing. An English officer joined us in the night and for a place to spend the night and we found the headquarters of the English officers. We have charge of the interests of their country at this point. They secured blankets for us and we spent the night on the floor, or Hillier and the English officer did, we drew numbers for the sofa and I landed it. It was five thirty when we roused ourselves the next morning one more stop on our way and that was at the city of Carcassone. The chief point of interest here was the walled city which is on the hill above what is now the main city. It repaid us for the stop off in spite of the fact that it is in the snow and slush caused by the melting snow. I could not help but think that it would be a fitting place for the Kaiser for it is one of the loneliest and most dreary looking places that I have ever visited. The walls completely surrounded the city and were inhabited by several thousand people. We visited the old church which is beautiful in its architecture and solemn in its secluded quietness. There was no one in the building when we visited this church and very few people were on the streets at the day was rough and very quiet in the day. As we stood reverently looking out over the surrounding hills for hundreds of years, we could hear nothing save the tick, tick of the old clock and the lone noise of dripping water that was falling seemed that every uniform in the world could be seen on the streets of this city as the soldiers of the various countries of the world passed before you. It is known as one of the most wicked places in France and one of the things that a visitor of only twenty-four hours would lead him to utter a prayer that no place shall ever be worse. It was a little after seven o'clock on Sunday evening, when Hillier and I found ourselves again packed in on a French train making our way to Bordeaux which had been in eleven o'clock before we reached this place. The train being a local and miserably slow. We jumped into a cab, or really an auto bus, and wound around for several minutes before we drew up in front of the leading hotel of the town which had been recommended to us. After a night's sleep we spent one of the most interesting days of sight-seeing, if we consider historic interest, that we had yet spent. Among other things is an old Roman Arena which is nearly two thousand years old. It is a masterpiece of arrangement and rich carving. A museum of the Alcamps, and other places were visited. Everything about this ancient city by the Rhone speaks of former years. There is nothing that would remind you of modern times. Not a new building, not a modern street, not a new place had been erected. All looked old. The streets were narrow and winding, the dwellers looked non-progressively content and the lazy moving waters of the Rhone seemed to add to the dreariness of the place. But for a few hours stay, no place had more interest. As I walked through the winding streets I could but think of the fact that hundreds, possibly thousands of years before Columbus ever dreamed of a country across the sea men and women were walking the streets through the winter weather passing. It was worth the trip to spend those few hours in Arles. Our next stop was at the city of Nimes which is only twenty miles from Arles and is also situated in the valley of the Rhone. All this section of France is so beautiful and the fertility of the soil makes an attractive land for plowmen. This region was one of the attractive parts of Gaul that made Caesar determined to take entire possession of Gaul "where the sun shone on fertile fields and where the grapes were abundant." It was in the year 50 B. C. that Caesar received the whole of Gaul which for 400 years remained under Roman rule. There are a number of places which the visitor at Nimes finds interesting. We found here another one of the famous old arenas. The date of its erection has been pretty well established as being between the years 138 and 150 A. D. Of course in the earlier days of its existence it was used for gladiatorial combats, bull fights, etc. It is still used at times for bull fights, but generally for other forms of amusement. Something out of the ordinary look place here on Christmas Day, 1918. er, Mrs. N. M. Pope. REPOSTER. ANGIER TO BUILD A NEW BAPTIST CHURCH At a Re-Union held last Sunday More Than $11,000.00 Was Subscribed. Angier, April 15.—Angier Baptist church had a reunion last Sunday, at which time they considered the proposition to build a new house of worship. Miss Robertson, Goddard and Hill, teachers in the Angier High School, assisted greatly in a programme of music. Grades had been prepared by a committee for all who came to the meeting. The house was filled. After the meeting had presented the proposition the subscriptions were announced. Five men and families gave $1,000 each; eight others gave $400 each and while the pastor announced the cards as they were sent up, Mr. W. H. Robinson placed the amount of a blockhead which amounted to $11,000. A building committee was appointed consisting of J. T. Hockaday, chairman, J. L. Johnson, treasurer, A. L. Overby, C. W. Flowers, W. H. Robinson, C. H. Broadwell and E. C. Nordan. It is believed that the outlay when completed will amount to at least $18,000.00. Angier has been noted for its nice school building and as a good commercial center. Now its citizens are determined to put it on the map religiously. Beware of small expenses; a small leak will sink a big ship.—Ray W. E. Mrs. J. D. Hemmingway of Bethel, We don't seek anything unless we expect to find it.
