Helps Sick Women

Cardui, the women's tonic, helped Mrs. Wilhem Evensole, of Hazel Patch, Ky. Read what she writes: "I had a general breaking-down of my health. I was in bed for weeks, unable to get up. I had such a weakness and dizziness, ... and the pain was very severe. A friend told me I had tried everything else, why not Cardui? ... I did, and soon saw it was helping me. After 12 bottles, I am strong and well."

RUSKIN ON MENDELSSOHN When John Ruskin was Slade Professor of Art at Oxford University, the students who took the course occasionally had a good opportunity to see literary fireworks at their best. The great critic was a master of sarcasm, and according to Dr. Ed. Poulton, who tells the story in his book of Oxford memories. He used his gift with great effect one day, after his feelings had been outraged by a rendering of a Mendelssohn anthem. To Ruskin's mind, the "frivolous postures" of the music did not belong to the solemn dignity of the Psalm. "Well," said Prof. Ruskin to his students, "you have just heard Mendelssohn's 56th Psalm—quite one of your favorite anthems here in Oxford. You think the little man—who never in his life sang the least notion of 'resisting in the wilderness; who never was oppressed by any man—stands no more. Everything is delicious to him—churches and pictures, and conversation and literature, and music and sentiment. "And how beautiful religion is for a thing to pipe and fiddle about! And how grand St. Paul is for majestic recitative! And Elijah! What themes of picturoqueness, what pathos and choral majesty. In the priests of Baal! And the Psalm! What endless topics in them for musical contrast! "He takes up, for instance, the 56th Psalm—quite one of your favorite anthems here in Oxford. You think the little man—who never in his life sang the least notion of 'resisting in the wilderness; who never was oppressed by any man—pealm it is,—to bring in something deliciously lively. 'Wings of a dove'—all love letters and dew, of course; now we turn on all the troubles, and away we go!" Ruskin delivered the passage with the keenest sense of humor and with restraint until the end, when, as he suddenly became wildly excited and was, of course, unable to keep the words of his manuscript, as he dashed about and violently waved his arms, while the long sleeves of his Master of Arts' robe jerked up and down. A lot of people like to see a man who is not afraid when they know he is not afraid.
