

CHRISTIAN CHURCH
 We are preparing a splendid program for next Lord's day. The Bible school with new life and new enthusiasm and greater interest. At the morning worship we shall treat a special theme, that has and is being neglected. The rush in the daily routine has thrown the balance wheel out of gear and one important phase of the system has ceased to operate. The child is being neglected to such an extent that the time will soon come that he will be rightfully taking the credit for raising himself. Hear the morning message: "What Manner of Child Shall It Be." The evening subject: "The Monkey Wrench of the Bible." The character is placed there to show every phase of life. You may know where the path leads before you follow. Hear it.

Good music. Good fellowship. Harmony and peace is the sincere desire of the church. Come over and worship with us. J. J. LANGSTON.
 More than 1,000 milliners assembled in convention at New York yesterday to raise the price of summer hats. Thousands of women had decided that if quotations continued to rise they could not raise the price.

AMENDMENT AND VOLSTEAD ACT UPHELD BY SUPREME COURT
 Which Was Unanimous, Regarded As Striking Death Blow To Hopes Of Wets, Although Permission Is Granted For Filing Motions For Rehearings

Washington, June 9.—The prohibition amendment and the enforcement act were held constitutional by the supreme court today in a unanimous decision. While attorneys for the interested parties were granted permission to file motions for rehearing, the decision was regarded generally as striking a death blow to the hopes of the wets. The court's opinion rendered by Justice Van Devanter was sweeping. It held that the amendment not only gave within the amending power conferred by the federal constitution but was lawfully proposed and now was the law of the land. While recognizing that Congress has limitations in respect to the enforcement of laws regarding beverages, the court held that the limits were not transcended in the enactment of the enforcement act restricting alcoholic content of intoxicants to one half of one per cent.

TO KEEP LIME UNSLAKED
 We often wish to keep some unslaked lime on hand for fruit spraying mixture, etc. It is usually a rather hard job to find a container which will not allow the lime to become unslaked. However, the empty carbide cans in which the fuel for our acetylene gas plant came, solved the problem. These cans, which have snug-fitting tops, will keep the lime perfectly for a year or more. Empty carbide cans have a way of piling upon a place where there is a gas plant and folks usually dispose of them rather cheaply. But anyway, be its price cheap or dear, the carbide can will prove its worth when it comes to keeping unslaked lime. Mrs. E. Lide, Jr., in The Progressive Farmer.

So it is with a strange sense of touching finger tips to a past already mythical that one talks to some one who knew O. Henry during his sojourn here, and who can really say, "Yes, it was thus and so, as you believe, for I knew him."
 A New York man, having swallowed two tacks in the soup that he was eating at a restaurant, has obtained a verdict for $25,000 damages against the restaurant proprietor. It is more profitable to swallow a tack than to sit on one.
 After months of suspension of such activity, the President, without a League of Nations covenant to guide him, has automatically resumed international relations by receiving foreign ambassadors and ministers.

Shingles, Paints and Building Things

There is a strong market for all of the things we carry for building purposes, but we are still fairly well stocked and can supply immediate orders with little difficulty.

This is the building season. Construction and reconstruction are going on all over the country. There is not near enough material to supply the demand that will come with the full opening of the season.

The goods we have in stock will be sold as cheaply as the price we paid will permit. When we get more, the price is bound to be higher.

For these reasons we are advising our friends to place orders now. Every delay will cost you money.

Give us lists of the things you will require. We will do our best to get for you all that you may need.

REIGN OF O. HENRY OVER 10 YEARS AGO

(New York Evening Post, June 4)
 Wm. Sydney Porter, better known as O. Henry, died in this city ten years ago tomorrow, that is, on June 5, 1910. So did all the diverse roads of his destiny bring him at last to his own kingdom, for "Bagdad-on-the-Subway" belonged to him as it never has to any other man.

The decision of the court was set forth in eleven conclusions covering seven separate proceedings. These proceedings included original suits brought by the state of Rhode Island directly attacking the constitutionality of the amendment. While agreeing as to the validity of the amendment and enforcement act, Justice McKenna and Clarke dissented from the majority interpretation of the concurrent power of federal and state governments to enforce prohibition. Chief Justice White held that the court should set forth the reasoning for its decision. He did this in a supplemental opinion. Justice McReynolds in a brief statement declared he was of the opinion that it was impossible to say at this time what construction should be given to the amendment. He added that "because of the bewilderment which the amendment creates" he preferred to remain free to consider the multitude of questions which will inevitably arise and demand solution.

Applies to All Liquors
 The decision set at rest contentions previously laid before the court that the amendment could not affect alcoholic liquors manufactured prior to January 16, when the amendment became effective. The court held that the amendment applied to such liquors the same as any produced after that time.

Regarding arguments to the effect that a state having constitutional referendum provisions could not have been said to have ratified the amendment until it had been submitted to the voters, the court cited its opinion, rendered last Monday in the Ohio referendum cases, in which it held that such referendum provisions do not apply to the federal amendments. Only one prohibition case of importance remains undecided. It is an appeal from New York involving the constitutionality of portions of the enforcement act prohibiting storage in warehouses of intoxicating liquors intended for personal use. This was argued this spring, but with the court's adjournment today for the summer cannot be decided before October at the earliest.

Eight years was the short span of his Caliphate here, yet in that time he penetrated close to the intangible but perfectly recognizable thing which the ancients worshipped as genius, and which we less reverent mortals style the "spirit of a place," often without realizing its significance. Not only did he get close to the spirit of this city, but he interpreted its muteness into articulate speech and became spokesman for it, and this office of spokesman and interpreter has not been challenged. Whether he walked the water front or dropped into some strange eating place on the Bowery, or as the spectator of the life of the great metropolis he occupied his caliph's throne in his favorite restaurant, watching people around the corner that never disappointed him, the city became his world and furnished him a rich store of material, unending inspiration and a revelation of that inner life which remains to most of us a sealed book. No, whatever turning he took, whatever fork of the road he chose, it would not have mattered. O. Henry must have finally reached this city that was waiting for him and claimed him as her own.

So much fact and legend have grown up about the name of O. Henry tales of his extravagant generosity, of his eccentric treatment of celebrity hunters, of his adventures in and out of the way places and with-out-of-the-ordinary people, that he begins to seem almost a myth. It is hard to realize that he was living here less than a dozen years ago, or that his favorite haunts knew him then as a daily visitant and his circle of friends in his flashing wit and rare sympathy.
