good old State, but, we judge, feared that other communities would feel hurt. The News says: "The disaster the west coast of Florida has suffered from storm, the property loss running into the millions, accentuates the fact that there is no place like North Carolina, for North Carolinians, at least. It is not necessary to buy an overcoat in Florida and sales of coal for heating purposes are small. It's the land of the flowers, but better some old red hill in Tazewellia.

"This Mississippi valley, with soil about three feet deep, a paradise for farmers, has its tornadoes every now and then, the black destroyers sweeping through, taking toll in life and property. Texas, rich and waxy, where the farmer does not have to buy fertilizer, where fortunes spout oil from wells, has its devastation. Proximity to the Gulf is dangerous. It is too cold for oranges and coconuts in North Carolina and despite desperate efforts to find oil, oil is lacking. The soil has to be enriched in places, but there is no danger of anything of a catastrophic nature happening. All a man has to do is work and he can reasonably count on getting along. Man can live in the open year around. There is no money to be picked off bushes but the piedmont section of the south is about as near a thing to the Garden of Eden as can be found, provided a man has a bit of energy. No hula-hula girls kick up on the beach at Wilmington, but the vacationist finds it lively enough.

"In the migrations to the west before the war, many people, some of them finding the flour in the barrel getting low, trekked in expectation of improving the family fortunes. Others are still hunting elusive fortune outside the borders of state, sacrifice, perhaps, moss for polish, but there is no reason for any man to hunt a place where it is easier to make a living and to live than North Carolina."

As Long As They Are Wanted There is a lot of paths in that resolution adopted by the Confederate Veterans at Chattanooga this week—to continue the annual reunions as long as four veterans are alive and cities of the South invite them. May there never come a time when a city of the South so far forgot its debt to the silent grey sleepers that it will not feel itself honored in entertaining any who followed the Stars and Bars.

There were fewer veterans to attend this annual meeting than in any previous year. There will be fewer still in the years to come. Another decade will see the thin grey line fade almost to nothingness. In the last few years mid the strife of our own generation, we have appeared somewhat neglectful of that duty all of the South owes its old defenders. Deep in the heart, though, of every son of the Old South there is an abiding love for the old fellows, and that love will live long after those who offered their lives to the Confederacy have passed to that reward that the god of loyalty and chivalry has for all such as they.

ROAD WORK IN SAMPSON The contract for the construction of the reinforced concrete bridge across South River at Antyrville goes to the Beane Iron and Bridge Company. This is a state project, being on the Clinton and Fayetteville Highway. As the survey of the Wilmington highway to the Pender line was not complete the contract was not let for either the road or bridge work on that thoroughfare. However, it is to be hoped that things will soon begin to move on that line. Already the Pender section of the road is largely complete and is said to be fine by recent tourists over it. The work on Stevens bridge is progressing and it is likely that these spans will be completed within a few weeks, and thus make unnecessary the long detour by the New Bridge. But even now cars, including the Dunn jitney, pass through the swamp wagon road east around the bridge. But a rain will make that impassable. Work has begun on the Mill Branch bridge near Clinton, making a detour and entry of town by the Fair Ground necessary. But this will not be so bad for Fair visitors. Claying on the road bed fifteen miles above Clinton on the Dunn highway has made good progress the past week, and this obstacle on the Dunn trip is practically removed.

The county force has done a fine job on the Tomahawk road and much needed improvement is being made on the section of the Lisbon road below Mr. W. E. Meacra. After the completion of this section the county force is expected to go to the Reed's Fordship as previously announced in this paper.—Sampson Democrat.

TALKING ABOUT A LADY Mr. Higgins gives us an interesting talk about the lady, or rather the female, Madame Rumer. What he says about the lack of understanding among people is suggestive. There is a hymn which says "We shall know each other better when the mists have cleared away." Mr. Higgins feels that we should get busy at the job now and not wait for the mists to roll away.

There is a story about Charles Lamb, the great English writer, which bears on this subject. Lamb, who was the godson of men, was said to have remarked about a person who was the subject of conversation, "I hate that man." "Why, Charles," said his friend, "you don't even know him." "That's just it!" replied Lamb, "you see, if I knew him I could not hate him."

There is also the story about the old lady who would find a good word to say to every one. Determined to get busy to say something at least one time, some spiritual being went to her and said, "The devil is a mighty bad man, what do you think of him?" "Well," she said, "I have always heard that he was a mighty energetic man." Now, if we could just try to know each other better, and find the good points, Madame Rumer would largely lose her effectiveness.—Monroe Journal.

MARTIN A. JACKSON'S TOMB UNVEILED The Woodmen's tomb to Mr. Martin Alderman Jackson was unveiled Sunday at the Nathan Jackson yard, Herring's township. Mr. Jackson was one of the soldier boys who gave his life in the World War. His body was brought home from France last spring and laid to rest under the name of his memory not only testified to his fidelity as a Woodman, but stands as a memorial of a true patriot and brave soldier. He was a son, as we are informed, of the late Martin D. Jackson, Mr. I. B. Hudson delivered the address of the occasion, as was most fitting as they were neighbors and comrades in arms.—Sampson Democrat.

CAPT. ED NEAL FINDS WEEVIL A HARDY BIRD (Monroe Journal) A South Carolina farmer has convinced Capt. Ed Neal, one of the most popular conductors on the Seaboard, that the boll weevil is a pest, but has come to stay despite all efforts to rid the country of its presence. "They told me," this farmer remarked to Capt. Neal after he had hauled over his ticket, "that the boll weevil would not survive our cold winters. Being of a skeptical disposition, I decided to ascertain the truth or falsity of this belief. Picking a good-sized weevil from a cotton square, I went to the ice plant nearby and had the engineer to drop the little scoundrel into the water that was being manufactured into ice. 'Now,' I thought, 'I'll see if you can be frozen to death.' There it stayed for twenty-four hours. The next day on pulling the ice out of the can, we found the weevil lying in the center of a 200-pound block. Unquestionably, it had been subjected to the severest cold possible as the thermometer in our section has never been known to drop low enough to freeze water in wholesale quantities. But don't think that weevil was dead! When we had out the ice up we took the weevil, frozen stiff, in the boiler room to thaw it out. It had lain there but a few minutes when we began to observe signs of life. Soon it gave a convulsive shake, spread its wings and fluttered out in the open, then to breed thousands more of its kind." Capt. Neal expressed astonishment. "Then," the South Carolinian continued, "I tried burning the bill of another weevil. With the flame of a match I heated its 'borer' red hot, and like the one that underwent the ice test, it refused to die." Capt. Neal, as he started to walk off, was called back. "You can't feed 'em to death," gloomily concluded the farmer, "nor freeze 'em out of existence nor burn 'em up, so what are we poor farmers going to do."
