MAKE ALL COTTON THAT IS POSSIBLE

Crop Nearly Made But Some thing Can Be Done To In-crease Yield

To me the greatest instrument that turned over and permit the engineer the Cape Pear and Yadkin Valley to look at the situation from the Railroad restored to its ancient place other view point. The government of importance as a carrier and cast crop builetin of a week or so ago their moral support into the fight gives some cotton figures that have which North Carolina is making for inclined me to take a backward look, and the result is that I am of the opinion we ought to be paying more attention to the crop that is in the ground than to the price that is held upon the bulletin board telling what lust year's crop is selling for. According to the bulletin the crop of 1921 amounted to 7,958,641 bales of 500 pounds. This is the smallest crop is not half the crop of 1914, and just about half of the crop of 1911. In the ten years prior to the war this country averaged five million bales consumption and the rest of the cotton was exported. Since the war began the consumption of cotton in the United States ran much higher, to some extent offsetting the lessened export movement, but before the war our normal export of cotton was almost as much over a period of several years as the whole erop of last

I was two or three times in the office of Colonel Hester, whose cotton statistics are the basis of practically ter prediced that if conditions do not change we would before long see a cotton famine. At that time cotton was pegged at about sixteen cents. Since then it has come up to twentytwo and although it has dropped back to twenty-one, twenty-one cents a pound for cotton is something to lead Captain James D McNeill, one of the Med The Rev. The old world is beginning to call for cotton, and it is going out in al picking up in this country. Unemployment has given way to increased pinning thearn more money. People have more to buy with, and each succeeding week will show a bigger pay roll throughout the nation. American mills will be calling for their five million or more balos of cotton as before the war, and probably it it to prevent these and river plans will be more. That points to a short amount for the export trade, which is gradually strengthening its position. It is time to pay serious atten tion to Colonel Hester's prediction Western Railroad, later known as the
