

When such are the case, how can...

One of the nurses in Mrs. Wallace Reid's dramatic film—played by Lillian Ward.

Victory Bateman, famous screen character player.

Robert McKim, famed as a screen villain, who plays the part of the alleged responsible physician, who is really a dope peddler.

Stanhope Wheatcroft, well known to fans, who plays the part of a drug addict.

James Kirkwood, famous leading man, who gave up the leading role in the sensational New York success, "The Fool," to do "his bit" by appearing in Mrs. Wallace Reid's anti-narcotic film, "Human Wreckage."

George Hackathorne, one of the greatest actors on the screen, who is seen as the taxi driver in the big photodrama.

Found Out!—At last the mother learns the secret of her daughter. She, too, has been caught in the terrible clutch of the monster!

William Allen Pinkerton, dean of detectives, who gave expert advice on technicalities of the drug traffic and how to combat it.

Eric Mayne, the distinguished English actor.

Harry Northrup, who is seen as the "man higher up" in the "dope ring."

Bessie Love, brilliant feminine support to Mrs. Wallace Reid in "Human Wreckage." Her performance stamps her as one of the leading actresses of the day.

James Kirkwood snapped at the Los Angeles Depot as he was met by Mrs. Ritter Wilkeson, a member of the Los Angeles Anti-Narcotic League.

"Now I Lay Me"—Billy and Betty Reid say their prayers with their mother, Mrs. Wallace Reid.

Lucille Rickson, popular screen comedienne.

How a Street Looks to a Drug Addict—This freak set was used in Mrs. Wallace Reid's motion picture, "Human Wreckage." It shows the distorted aspect which develops under the constant use of narcotics.