

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. W. S. GOLDEN

The baptism and temptation of Jesus, as recorded in Matthew 3 and 4 is our lesson for next Sunday.

One of the earliest arguments that developed after Christ was gone from the earth was as to whether He were only a man, and nothing more; or whether He were God, and in no sense ever human at all. In other words, was He all human and not at all divine, or was He all divine and not at all human? All the orthodox Christian churches in the world teach, and have taught for centuries that He was both human and divine. The Jesus whom people saw walking in Galilee was a real man, not a phantom. The baby who lay in the manger at Bethlehem was a real baby, not an imaginary one. On the other hand, the baby and the man were more than human. They were an incarnation of the Deity.

Our lesson today emphasizes the human side of the nature of Jesus. Into the carpenter shop up at Nazareth there came word again and again of wonderful preaching being done down in the Jordan valley by one John who was being called "The Baptist." He found John preaching like a prophet of God, reminding the people of their awful sins, calling on them to repent, and manifest their repentance by being baptized there in the Jordan river. John caught up the prophecies of Isaiah and told the people that the time of their fulfillment was at hand, that the kingdom of God was near, that the promised Messiah would soon appear, and that while he himself would decrease, the Messiah would increase before them in glory and power. John's condemnation of sin was terrific and convincing. Thousands of people came to John and were baptized. Jesus was in the crowd, and came with the others. John drew back from Jesus (whom of course he knew, being his cousin) and said: "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" John knew that Jesus had no sins to repent of, and that Jesus should not (in his opinion) be coming along in that crowd of conscience stricken sinners. And notice this: that without confessing a single sin, and without the least show of repentance, Jesus said: "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." And as they saw Jesus go and be baptized, who could hold back and consider that he himself didn't need to go?

We church people have revivals to convert sinners, and maybe we are the first ones who should be converted. We think that the invitation to accept Christ should of course be accepted by the outcasts and bums, but have we accepted it? Jesus went forward, accepted the invitation, and was baptized.

After His baptism He went into the wilderness for forty days. They were strange and awful days, which we can never understand. His mind was troubled. Jesus was sharing our temptations and our trials. Three things, according to the record, especially troubled Him. First: Why should he suffer this hunger in the wilderness, when He knew that He had the power to turn even stones into bread for His food? But should He use His divine power to side-step suffering? If once, why not again? If here, why not on Calvary? But that would have been to turn aside from the mission of atonement which He came to perform.

Secondly: Why not do some spectacular thing to attract attention to Himself and His mission? Why not cite to the people in Jerusalem God's promise in the 91st Psalm that "they shall bear thee up in their hands lest thou dash thy foot against a stone" and then throw Himself from a high point of the Temple and let the angels bear Him gently down? Wouldn't this be legitimate advertising? Wouldn't it be fine publicity? No it would not, for the Son of God. He would challenge the mind of men with something more worthy than that, and leave such methods to high divers and jugglers.

The third troubling thought was this: Why not bow down to Satan, or in other words enter into a working understanding with the powers of evil, on a live-and-let-live basis so to speak, when by that means He could be assured of earthly power and wealth for His cause? He firmly rejected the suggestion. It must not be done.

And now forty days have passed, but these problems have been settled by Jesus, and His mind is easier, but his body is exhausted. "Then the devil leaveth him, and behold, angels came and ministered unto him."

-- A Remarkable Year --

By R. F. BEASLEY

(Editor's note: Frank Smethurst, managing editor of the Raleigh News & Observer, asked R. F. Beasley, a frequent contributor to this newspaper, for an expression of opinion on the most important events of 1933. His reply is herewith reproduced.—THE EDITOR.)

Dear Frank: You asked me to give my opinion as to the twelve most important events in the world in 1933. I don't know of any important single event. An event, it seems to me, is something that happens at a single time and does not necessarily have anything leading up to it or following it. Now of course I do not mean to say that an event is ascribed as an annual that had neither pride of ancestry nor hope of posterity. But I do not know of any set of single events that were very important. Yet I think that the year 1933 registered in our country a composite of events, actions and tendencies which taken together, mark it as one of the landmarks in our history. I never felt better over a year in my life: I never felt a greater thrill at what I think I see. And it is not the kind of thrill which I may have felt when our boys were marching and massing and the bands were playing and we were achieving victory in the World War.

Going to foreign affairs, Frank, I don't think Mr. Hitler's rise to power in Germany was so hot. As some one said the other day, Hitler is merely a throwback, an excrement, in the history of the German people, bewildered as they are. It is sad to think that a people can be made to hang their hopes upon such a thing as Hitler and his party. Why, he doesn't even have the virtue of originality. He takes some of the old Kaiser's bombast and mixes it with the ideas of all the Jew baiters of two thousand years and expects to build something on such a structure. When Disraeli, prime minister of England, was taunted with being a Jew he replied that his ancestors were priests and his own when the ancestors of his opponent were swinging by their tails in German forests. Mr. Hitler is only a Ku Kluxer in a very large scale and his career will be but an incident in the long struggle of the German people to work out their own salvation and get back to that high plane on which their philosophers, musicians, students and hard-working practical people lived in the old days before William the Strutter diverted their minds to militarism. And Hitler, being only an incident, is not important in the sequence. And Russian recognition? That was not an event. That was a sequence in the returning sanity of the people of the United States. It showed only that we were seeing one ghost less. And Japan? What of its doing in China and its mad rush along the road of military imperialism? Nothing, except one more illustration of the truth of the Bible which says that he who swears by the sword shall die by the sword. If these Japs were half as smart as we pretend they are they would see that they are only following the path marked out by William the Strutter.

This, Frank, in a kind of rough way, is the way I feel about it. I feel that 1933 has brought us to the threshold of a great adventure. I think that there are many men among us today who are as ready for this great new adventure in social life as your boss, Mr. Daniels, said that Columbus was for his great adventure, when he made that speech to our brothers, the Mexicans, the other day. Now of course we have all been saying these things for a long time. Even George Washington said them in his day. He said that his first wish was "to see the whole world in peace, and the inhabitants of it as one body of brothers, striving who should contribute most to the happiness of mankind." Yes, we have been saying these things in a way sorter like we say two and two make four. But, Frank, I think that 1933 has helped to bring us to the idea that they are not only true, but that we can't get along without putting them into practice; and that why 1933 is one long, big important event to me.

Of course I just laughed at that. But now I don't know so much about it. I may not be as smart as I thought I was. Of course I don't think the Lord sent us the business disaster. But somebody gave us rope and like the calf, we found its end and got jerked off our feet. And because we got jerked so hard we got over a lot of our foolish vanity. We got humble. We found that the big boys who were telling us that money was everything and that they, the big boys, were our guardian angels, were nothing but little old imitations of that old pet belly in the Bible who built a big new barn and filled it up and told his soul to rest in peace. And when we got well and truly convinced on that subject we began to think that maybe there was something to this philosophy of Jesus which we have been talking so much about and doing so little about. We began to think that if love could remain after barns and bins and factories passed away, there must be something to it. Hold on here, we began to say, there may be some mistake about this idea of the business cycle being responsible for everything. Maybe we have something to do with business cycles. Maybe our country can no more subsist on ten per cent Divs and ninety per cent Lazarus, than it could continue half free and half slave. Maybe that the true rule of Providence is that in order for some to have, all must have, rather than our old belief that some shall prosper indefinitely while most shall suffer indefinitely. And by George, we are beginning to find that even if this is not a moral law it is an economic law, which is the same thing. And if it is an economic law it is a natural law and therefore it is bound to be God's law, so it all comes back to the same thing.

Sanford, N. C.

Gentlemen:
Answering your letter as to the results we have obtained with your plant bed fertilizer, I beg to state that last season and season before we used OVERSIZE PLANT BED FERTILIZER along beside other brands and the plants that we used your fertilizer under made a better growth from the beginning, and at the last made so much better growth that the plants from your fertilizer were pushing us to set out while others had to be doctored to get large enough to set.

I consider your fertilizer the best by far that I have ever used under tobacco plants.

I am farming with Mr. Charlie Baker.

Yours truly,

(Signed): C. H. MEASAMER.

You cannot argue against results, so do your plant bed a favor and Buy
