PREDICTS MILK FAMINE UNLESS DAIRYMEN GET BETTER PRICES.

The American city dwellers are courting a milk famine by greatly underpaying the man who produces their milk, is the opinion of Charles Staff, secretary of the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics.

It takes a dairyman a full half hour daily to milk, feed and care for one cow, says Mr. Staff. A dairyman who has twenty cows must put in ten hours a day of solid work in looking after them.

A drastic change in the existing dairy industry is to be conserved, according to Mr. Staff. "The number of dairy cows in the East is gradually diminishing. Young folks are not staying on the farm and as the older people reach the age when they feel they can no longer bear the burden, they also follow their children to the city, or decide to give up their cows and live on what means they have available."

"An increase of one cent to the farmer for every quart of milk delivered to the city home would go far toward remedying the present serious state of affairs. The difference in one month to the average family would not represent the price of a single admission to a good movie show, but the extra cent to the farmer would mean the difference between a starvation wage and a living return."

The individual dairyman can improve his own condition somewhat, by the adoption of better methods which will show him how to get the extra dollar out of his business, according to Mr. Staff. A system of cost records is of prime importance. This should include the weighing of the feed and milk of each cow and the feeding of the animals according to their individual production.

DEATH OF HOUSTON SUTTON.

beyond all reasonable doubt, the Declaration was the work of Jefferson, chairman of the committee appointed to write the same, and this Virginian admitted that Jefferson was aided in writing the Declaration by the first actual Declaration of Independence made at Charlotte, Mecklenburg County, North Carolina, May 20, 1775.

Mr. Thomas then, referring to the United States Constitution, formed in 1787, declared that only once had there been any danger of the dissolution of the Union—during the period from 1861 to 1865—which had happily passed; and referred to the reunited country, North and South.

He paid tribute in this connection to the American flag and its message for all, whether native or foreign born, of political and religious freedom, and of equal rights to all men under the law; that flag had always been finally victorious upon land and sea, and had never been lowered in defeat, quoting a distinguished United States Senator, who said:

"I have seen the glories of art and architecture and of river and mountain. I have seen the sun set on the Jungfrau and the moon rise over Mount Blanc. But the fairest vision on which my eyes ever rested was the flag of my country, beautiful as a flower to those who love it, terrible as a meteor to those who hate it, it is the symbol of the power and glory and honor of one hundred millions of Americans."

Above all, it is the flag of a Christian nation. Here stand side by side this flag of liberty and of the American soldier, the Cross of Christ.

He then traced the similarity between the American form of Government and the Church Government of the Episcopal church, showing that the source of power in both the state and church was from the people.

In this connection he said that the war 1812, the second war against England, had the effect to destroy much prejudice arising from the position of the Episcopal church at the time of the Revolution.

In this second war with England, Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Episcopalian fought side by side and went into battle singing The Star Spangled Banner.

Concluding his address and showing the part played by members of the Episcopal church in the framing of both the Declaration of Independence and the United States Constitution, he expressed the hope that the time would come when those who believe in the cause of Christ may unite under one flag—the flag of Heaven—the Cross of Calvary, even as the soldiers of the North and South were reunited under the stars and stripes and the Anglo-Saxon race was reunited in the World War.
