A WORN OUT PROMISE

Once in a while an orator makes the promise: "Elect me, and I will take over all the electric light and power companies and give the people the service at cost."

But the electric light and power companies are giving service at cost today. Only, the cost includes $150,000,000 of taxes which they have to pay. And it includes a fair return on their bonds and stocks which are largely owned by insurance companies and savings banks; and over 1,000,000 customers and employe owners.

When the government tries to run a business the costs increase. But the government can regulate a business. That's what state governments are doing with the electric light and power business, and the results show that they are doing it very well.

WHO PROFITS MOST?

Lumber, oil and metal, three of the great natural resources of the west, are indispensable to American family life. Each of these three industries has been carried on by a type of men who recognized no obstacles. Each industry has to cope with the forces of nature in their most destructive forms. It takes big men to pioneer and develop such industries; to give the public constantly increasing and better service, employes better working conditions and good wages, and the government a constantly greater proportion of total income in the form of taxes.

Our primary industries, which are the mainstay of our prosperity in all sections of the country, should receive every possible encouragement at the hands of the people and the government who profit most by the successful operation of such properties.

OUR GREAT ASSET.

Asheville Citizen.

Western North Carolina is destined to be a great textile manufacturing district. It is already headed toward that greatness. Immense water power, favorable climate, nearness to the raw materials and, above all, an unequalled supply of excellent white labor are the foundations on which the business is being built.

In an article entitled "Abundant American Labor South's Asset" in The Manufacturers Record, Mr. Wade Harris, Editor of The Charlotte Observer and an authority on conditions in Western North Carolina, has this to say:

"The textile industry is gaining impetus in the mountain districts (in North and South Carolina) and largely by reason of the abundance of native labor available. There is no exhaustion of this supply, for the Piedmont and mountain sections are populated with families of the Rooseveltian characteristics. The prospect is that no matter to what extent the industrial South is developed, there need be no fear on the score of exhaustion of native labor to man the factories."

Mr. Harris makes the point that this labor will always be plentiful for the textile mills because the mill owners are educating the children of the present mill hands to regard work in the mills as a fine career. He quotes a spokesman of the mill owners as declaring that "the health, training and opportunities we bring to the children of today will largely determine whether they will care to be the mill workers of tomorrow," and that the Southern mill man who does not go in for child welfare work and for the proper education and protection of the mill workers' children "is a traitor to his industry and to his own selfish ends."

Northern and New England textile men, Mr. Harris continues, bring their capital to the South, "but they do not bring their labor." In their Northern mills they have tried out every kind of labor from the four ends of the earth, and they have discovered that nowhere on the globe can labor be recruited to equal the Anglo-Saxon workers of the Piedmont and mountain districts of this State. Western North Carolina's workers have been tested and found unsurpassed. They are here in inexhaustible numbers, and, because of their numbers, industry and quickness to learn, they are our greatest industrial asset.

COLOR NOW DOMINANT IN HOME DECORATION

That color is the dominant note in American home decoration today is the statement of J. Albert Seaford, noted color artist who recently won high honors at the Chicago Exhibit and who has a permanent display in the Boston Public Library.

Brighter colors are found in floor coverings, furniture, upholsterings, draperies and lighting fixtures. Vari-colored shingles in the roof, brilliant awnings, new color combinations in motor cars furnish further evidence of this pronounced style trend.

The vogue of color has made itself felt in the electrical business according to Martin Electric Co., who says color is being used more generally in lighting fixtures for the home. Only a few years ago lighting fixtures were found in only plain shades such as brass, silver, grey, black. Newer style fixtures today have an attractive antique finish with cheerful touches of red, blue, green, gold. Home lighting fittings decorated in colors now harmonize with other furnishings.

THE BLOOD OF COMMERCE

Since 1920, every item of railroad operating expense has been reduced except taxes, which have increased 50 per cent. Railroads that by careful economies have cut other items, are faced by the insatiable demand for more money for tax expenditures that take between 6 and 7 cents of every dollar they collect from fares and freights. The total tax payment is more than $1,000,000 a day.

Railroads should pay taxes; they are willing to do so. But in levying these taxes, the public needs to remember that there is a limit to operating economies; over-taxation must bring higher rates or impaired service. Excessive taxes sap the railroads' vitality until blood transfusion—higher rates, the blood of commerce—will be necessary. In the end, the public must pay; the load cannot be forever shifted to the railroads' shoulders.
