

Nollner Sees Church Interest Growing in Junaluska Assembly

Wider interest in the Lake Junaluska summer assembly, as shown in the recent adoption by 17 Methodist conferences of the plan of electing two directors to a body which will hold in trust the property of the assembly for the church, was reported by Dr. Ralph Nollner, superintendent to the Western North Carolina conference in Asheville last week.

The last conference to accept the invitation to name two directors for the board which will hold the assembly property in trust, are those of Virginia, Mississippi and Alabama, Dr. Nollner reported.

There is in each of the 17 conferences a quadrennial committee on Lake Junaluska which ranks with the other standing committees of the conferences.

A fact brought out in Dr. Nollner's report is that the church as a whole is taking a deeper interest every year in the work of the assembly, and that the people are taking advantage of opportunities that are offered each summer season for study, inspiration and recreation. Acting in accordance with the wishes of the trustees as expressed in their annual meeting in 1930, the assembly has secured incorporation under the laws of the State, using the official name The Lake Junaluska Methodist Assembly.

Influenced by the support of such men as Bishop Edwin Mouzon, a former commissioner of the assembly, the church through its general board of Christian education and the general board of missions, is taking an active interest in every effort to advance the cause of the assembly.

These committees are working with the trustees in an effort to place the assembly on a sound financial footing and as a result friends of the church, especially those who hold obligations of the assembly have come readily to the support of the organization, and there is every reason to believe that the future of the Junaluska Methodist Assembly is assured.

Record Is Set

The season of 1931 was the 19th annual summer session conducted at Lake Junaluska. According to the report of superintendent Nollner, this year is looked upon as successful to an extent probably beyond the expectations of friends of the movement. Financial depression had been expected to cut down the attendance at the Assembly and this was true in some cases, yet in a great many instances the attendance was larger than for many years. The Duke Summer school as an example, set a record that surpassed every former year with one single exception. Several of the conferences during the season also showed near record attendance, and the spirit of these schools and conferences has never been better. The Missionary conference, the Spiritual Life conference, the Laymen's conference, the Leadership schools and the Schools of Religion were led this year by men of outstanding ability in the church. It is considered that the season contributed in a distinct way to the upbuilding of the church in general.

Director Urged

The following are some of the recommendations suggested to the conference by Superintendent Nollner: That the Western North Carolina Conference committee on Junaluska secure the appointment of a director in each presiding elder's district. The duties of this director would be to co-operate with the trustees and conference committee in advertising the schools and conferences, and in general to look after the interests of Lake Junaluska within the bounds of the district; that whenever possible, the district conference be visited by one of the members of the conference committee give careful consideration to the question of how the assembly can better serve the interests of the church, and especially as to how the Western North Carolina conference can receive larger benefits from the schools and conferences conducted annually at Lake Junaluska; that the conference committee offer to co-operate with the conference board of missions the conference board of Christian education, and the conference board of lay activities, in promoting attendance upon the conferences and schools conducted annually by the general board of the church.

Realizing that as an organization serves it also prospers, the officials of the assembly have determined to leave nothing undone that can develop the assembly to the point where it will be of maximum interest to the church as a whole. This policy pursued to success will have the effect of making Junaluska the summer capital of Methodism throughout the entire South, it is believed.

The Lake Junaluska Assembly, first known as the Southern Assembly, was organized about 19 years ago by a group of churchmen, eager to establish a place where those deeply conscious of the church's needs and problems could come together annually and make a study of these things with the idea of solving the problems and assisting the church to better things. Two years ago those who had established and who owned the Assembly voted to present it to the church through the various Conferences as holding bodies. As already stated seventeen of the Conferences of the Southern Methodist Episcopal church have voted to undertake the task of making this the center of Methodist activities.

For the past several years the assembly has been directed by Dr. Nollner, the superintendent. During this time more progress has been made than in all the time before. The future has been assured as a result of the support of the various conferences that have co-operated with the superintendent and the board of trustees, it is pointed out.

Must Prune Or Feed Nature Apple Trees

The heavy production of apple trees this past season, added to the extremely dry weather of 1930 and the fall of 1931 has left many trees in bad shape.

"We find many orchards where the vitality of the trees has been seriously reduced," says H. R. Niswonger, extension horticulturist at State College. "This is especially true in those orchards where legume crops have not been used and where there is little humus in the soil. The trees grown under such conditions have developed weak, worn-out and unproductive wood. Either these trees must receive heavy applications of plant food and moisture or they must be pruned."

During this period of low prices, orchardists are loath to spend much money for fertilizers and some do not care to buy legume seed for planting between the rows this fall. This means that many will do heavy pruning this winter, Mr. Niswonger says.

But to do this, he suggests that the grower give each tree careful consideration. The pruning should be a thinning process consisting mainly of the removal of lapping branches or those covering such branches as bear the best fruit.

Pruning does not increase the total yield though it is a means of increasing the color and size of the fruit. The removal of surplus branches will give a better balance between the food received from the roots and leaves thus resulting in renewed vigor of the fruiting wood. The time to prune, says Niswonger, will depend on the weather conditions and how much is to be done. It may be started directly after the trees have become dormant and extended through the blooming period, avoiding pruning during freezing weather.
