Turnips Good Feed For Dairy Cow

Turnips do not rank so high in digestible nutrients because they are about 90 percent water but they are relished by dairy cows and have a splendid appetizing and physical effect on the animals.

"I believe every farmer who has a dairy cow will find it profitable to plant some turnips for cow feed before August 20," says R. H. Ruffner, head of the animal husbandry department at State College. "Turnips require fertile land put into good condition before planting. Actual seeding should be done between August 10 and 20 in the vicinity of Raleigh. Last year with only a fair season, we made 1,000 bushels on 2 1/2 acres. The seed were bought from a local dealer at 40 cents a pound and sowed broadcast at the rate of about three pounds to the acre. Fifteen pounds of Crimson Clover an acre was planted with the turnips and caused no decrease in the yield."

Mr. Ruffner says he fertilized the turnips well with both stable manure and commercial fertilizer.

The roots were pulled before the first hard freeze and stored in the unused box stalls with a six-inch ventilator through the center. A cutting box was made four feet long and eighteen inches wide. Each day the turnips were piled into this box and cut with a shovel and each cow received ten pounds a day after the evening milking. The turnips were given as extra feed with cows receiving their usual amounts of grain, silage and hay. However, the college dairy is generally short on milk at the time the turnips were first fed and the production picked up immediately.

No Textbook Change Likely At Present

Such a strong reaction has been received from over the state in opposition to any changes in any of the textbooks now in use in the public schools that it is not believed the State Board of Education would adopt any new books any time soon even if it should be recommended by the State Textbook Commission. The prevailing feeling here is that now is not the time to make any changes in textbooks, especially if such changes would compel the discarding of several hundred thousand books that could otherwise be used for several years yet.

Several weeks ago the State Textbook Commission held a meeting in Greensboro and announced that it would make a study of the geography text now in use. This was generally interpreted to mean that it would recommend the adoption of a new

QUAINT CLAIMS ARE PRESENTED FOR INSURANCE

The following extracts, from the report of one of the large indemnity insurance companies proves that "the truth" about personal injuries is often "stranger than fiction."

"Insured was at a party in friend's house. One of the guests, a young lady who is quite an athlete, was showing her strength and lifting claimant. She pressed his ribs so hard she fractured two of the ribs. While being initiated into the order of Barnacles this man in the leg by a blank cartridge, resulting in a powder burn.

"Standing in a bathtub, he fell out of the widow."

"In bed playing with three baby. Baby struck him in the head with a milk bottle, breaking front teeth."

"At home dancing with woman companion when pin in her hair hit his right ear drum."

"Insured had hot water bath stomach while in bed, resulting in scalding abdomen and legs."

"Dancing at a club, sat on broken glass on a chair, resulting in seven stitches."

Governor O. Max Gardner, when asked if he had heard anything about this proposed change in geography books, said he had not. He declined to state what stand he would take if the adoption of a new geography text should be recommended. He did point out, however, that for two years he opposed the adoption of a new arithmetic, although recommended by the Textbook Commission, and that the only reason why he finally voted for the change the third year was because the prices had finally been reduced to such a point that the cost of the new book was less than the cost of the old one.

Indications are that the Board of Education will seek to get the publishers of the books now in use to lower their prices, instead of to have new books adopted, in the belief that they can save the school children and parents more money in this way.
