Felix E. Alley Took Oath As Judge Sat.

 you already so worthily wear.
 "With affectionate and highest regard, I am
 "Sincerely yours,
 "J. C. B. EHRLINGHAUS."
 To which Judge Alley replied as follows:
 "My dear Governor:
 "I have just received your fine letter of the 25th instant. The entire State deprecates the sad event that made vacant the Judgeship of the Twentieth District.
 "Until now it had never occurred to me that I would ever occupy a place on the Superior Court Bench. Not that I did not covet the honor, and the opportunity of service which the position affords, but because my predecessors, in my days, have appeared to me to have a superior claim, and I have found happiness in serving them rather than in the furtherance of my own aspirations. While it is well known by everyone that so far as any suggestion of mine is concerned the honor comes to me unsought, yet the fine friendship evidenced by the large number of lawyers and citizens, who have voluntarily endorsed me, gives me deepest satisfaction.
 "Therefore, with gratitude too deep for words, I accept your commission calling me to a larger field of service. More than professional or political triumph of my humble career, I shall always cherish this manifestation of your confidence and esteem.
 "I would that I could feel more worthy of the high honor you have so graciously conferred, and better qualified to discharge the responsible duties which its acceptance places upon me. Conscious that your generosity, rather than any merit of my own, brings me this distinction, my efforts shall be untiring to vindicate your choice and justify your faith.
 "Believing that there is no virtue so God-like as justice, I shall ever strive to hear courteously, consider conscientiously, answer wisely, and decide impartially every question presented for my determination, and in all respects and in every way to uphold and preserve the glorious traditions of the North Carolina judiciary.
 "With high regards and best wishes for the continued success of your administration, I am
 "Cordially, your friend,
 "FELIX ALLEY."
 Judge Alley, a resident of Waynesville for about 20 years, is one of the self-made men of the times, if that expression holds as it once did, for by his native wit and genius he has forged ahead until he has reached one of the ambitions of his life.
 Born in Whiteside Cove, Jackson county, July 5, 1873, the youngest child of his parents, Colonel John H. Alley and Sarah Whiteside Norton Alley, he grew up among the mountains that shut in the scenes of his nativity and imbued the freedom and strength of mind and body such surroundings give.
 He was educated in the public schools of Jackson county and the Cullowhee high school, while it was under the supervision of Professor R. L. Madison, whom Mr. Alley claims now as one of the best friends he has ever had, and before it became the Western North Carolina Teachers' College, thus getting all of his education in Jackson county.
 When 25 years old, he was elected clerk of the superior court of Jackson county and held the position for one term, retiring from it in 1902. While clerk he studied law, and in February, 1903, stood the examination before the supreme court and obtained his license to practice in the courts of North Carolina. In 1904, he was elected to represent Jackson county in the lower house of the State legislature, holding that position for one term, and while serving his county during that session he met for the first time J. C. B. Ehringhaus, the present Governor of North Carolina, and a strong friendship between the two sprang up, which has continued uninterrupted.
 In the general election of 1910, Mr. Alley was elected solicitor for the 12th judicial district, and in the middle of the term moved to Waynesville, where he has since resided. In 1916, he was elected on the national Democratic ticket and voted for Woodrow Wilson in the electoral college. In 1920, he was again chosen on the national Democratic ticket as elector and voted that year in the electoral college for Cox.

 By that year, 1920, his reputation as a campaigner and an orator of more than ordinary ability had become State-wide, and calls from far and near came to him for appointments and speaking dates. Since 1920, he has campaigned in all the counties of the old 10th Congressional district and in the State from Robbinville to Jacksonville in the tide-water section of North Carolina. During the campaign of 1932, he made 20 political speeches in as many different counties in North Carolina.
 In 1932 he was a delegate both to the State Democratic convention and the National Democratic convention in Chicago. At the latter place he was among the admirers and advocates of the nomination of Franklin D. Roosevelt.
 In all the positions that he has held, he has never sought re-election, serving but one term in each and retiring without seeking renomination. Among the minor positions that he has held, he was county attorney in both Jackson and Swain counties, attorney for Haywood county, and during the World War a member of the legal advisory board of Haywood county. During the World War, he campaigned in many of the counties in Western North Carolina in behalf of war measures.
 As a lawyer, however, Mr. Alley takes special pride. In addition to his State license to practice law, he holds licenses to practice in the courts of Virginia, Tennessee, Georgia, South Carolina, in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, and in the United States Supreme court. For 30 years, his legal practice has covered the entire field of criminal and civil litigations common to this section. That he is learned in the laws goes without question. His speeches before the jury on all occasions bring many to the courthouse for a real feast of oratory. He is a hard hitter before a jury, but absolutely fair in everything he says. He harbors no grudge and can be as fair to an enemy as to a friend. That is why his friends think that he will make a great judge.
 It will, therefore, be no hard step for Mr. Alley to advance from the platform before the jury to the judge's desk. True, his whole legal career has been in striking straight from the shoulder before a jury in behalf of his clients, but his inherent honesty of purpose and his vital belief in the integrity of justice will, without doubt, make him an upright judge. That is what the people of Waynesville think.
 Genealogically, Judge Alley comes of honorable ancestry. His great grandfather, John H. Alley, was the progenitor of the American branch of the family. He was born in Liverpool, England, but came to America with his parents, who settled in Petersburg, Va., where he was reared. After becoming 21 years old, he came to North Carolina and settled in Rutherford county, where he became a farmer and slave owner. There he lived and died.
 One of the elder Alley's sons, also named John H. Alley, was born in Rutherford county. For two terms, he represented his senatorial district in the State senate, and for a number of terms he was high sheriff of Rutherford county. He married Susan Hampton, of Rutherford, where she was born and died.
 Colonel John H. Alley, a son of the last mentioned, was born in Rutherford county in May, 1813, but died at Whiteside Cove December 2, 1902. He was a member of the commission appointed to transfer the Cherokee Indians from North Carolina to the Indian territory. About 1847, he removed from Rutherford to Jackson county, where he bought large tracts of land which he worked with his negro slaves. For a number of years, he was colonel of the State militia, and, during the War Between the States, he was colonel of the home guard. Ten children were born to him and his wife, Sarah Whiteside Norton Alley, Judge Felix E. Alley being the tenth.
 At present, Judge Alley is a member of the State Bar association, a member of the Masonic fraternity and a member of the Waynesville Methodist church.
 Thursday, the day after Judge Alley received his appointment at the

Law Library Bill Likely To Pass Without Difficulty

Library Would Be Maintained By Adding $1 To Each Civil And Criminal Case Completed.

A law library for the Haywood county courthouse seems assured as a result of the Howell bill, already passed by the house and certain of similar action by the Senate.
 The bill, sponsored by Representative J. H. Howell, with the support of Senator W. R. Francis, provides that the maintenance of the library will come from costs of $1 added to each completed civil and criminal case in Haywood county superior court.
 The measure names the chairman of the county board of commissioners, the clerk of the superior court, and the president of the Haywood county bar association as custodians of the law library.
 All the books, equipment, and supplies will remain the property of Haywood county and the "county is authorized and empowered to add thereto, by gift, donation, purchase, or such furniture as necessary."
 The original bill, introduced by Representative Howell, provided that funds should also come from added costs in local courts but the committee amended it, limiting the costs in superior court of Haywood county.

Demonstration On Meat Curing Will Be Given Today

Just after Christmas, W. D. Smith, vocational agriculture teacher, gave a meat curing demonstration at the shop building at the high school. The demonstration has caused so much comment from the boys and girls that a second demonstration will be given this afternoon, Thursday, at 2 o'clock. Those wishing to get the latest and most practical method in curing meat should not forget the above date and place.

hands of the governor and when he was receiving the congratulations of his friends in Haywood and from other counties, he was asked for an expression as to his reactions to the appointment he had received. His reply is characteristic of the man he is. He said: "Whether I possess the qualifications that will enable me to measure up to the requirements of the high office to which I have been appointed, I do not know.
 "The idea of occupying a place on the bench is so new to me I have not had time to give it much thought. However, in view of my long experience as a practicing lawyer I have my own views of some of the attainments a judge should possess. I think the judge is neither the creator nor the preserver of things human or divine. It is his business to judge, to decide, to compare, and determine relative to existing things.
 "The fact that he should separate the true from the false does not change the character of his task. The parties furnish proof of what they claim the truth to be and authorities to show what they claim the law to be.
 "The judge simply acts according to rules made for him and decides what the law is. If he weighs the evidence, he acts as a scales. When he meets out justice, he serves as a yardstick. He should add nothing either to the weight or the quantity.
 "If he attempts to pass upon the justice of the law, or to modify it to meet his own ideas, he invades the province of the Legislature. If he decides the law is unjust and should not be enforced out of mercy for the transgressor, the executive department of government is deprived of its functions.
 "I think a disregard for these principles would abolish government by law and substitute government by caprice, because then there would be as many different kinds of law as there are shades of opinions among judges, and, like the stars, they 'differeth one from another in glory.'
 "I think that no judge can safely deviate from the law as it is written to satisfy his own mind of what the law ought to be, and every occupant of the bench should clearly understand this limit of his functions. It is imperative that he be a student. He must sit with the judges of our highest courts and see from their opinions the very essence of the point decided. He must occupy the place of the law-writers in their studies and from their viewpoint behold the real heart of the textbook.
 "If he is so fortunate as to be able to explore with the telescope of a fully informed mind the currents of jurisprudence, and with the microscope of a trained and accurate judgment be able to tell exactly the nature of the question presented for his decision, he will then be able to administer with an even hand equal and exact justice to the pauper in his lowly tenement and the rich man in his marble palace."
 And who can study these wise and precise statements about the law without feeling that we have here what the courts and people need, a wise and upright judge?
 Judge Alley said at the conclusion of his statement that he feels the need of his friends and that he is entirely open to advice and counsel as to the administration of the great and exacting office that he is now assuming.
 Judge Alley will hold his first term of Superior Court in Asheville beginning Monday, February 6, and he will preside over courts in Buncombe and Madison counties until July 1 when he will come to the 20th district to hold courts until January 1, 1934.

Baptist Pastors Close Successful Convention Here

Conference Will Meet At Sylva Next January. New Officers Chosen.

After selecting Sylva as the place for the 1934 meeting and January 30, 1934, as the date, the Western North Carolina Baptist Ministers' conference adjourned here at noon Tuesday. Officers elected are: The Rev. T. F. Dietz, of Beta, president, the Rev. W. W. Williams, of Oteen, secretary, and the Rev. J. B. Grice, West Asheville, chairman of the program committee.
TWO RESOLUTIONS PASSED
 Two resolutions were passed at the morning session. The first expressed a strong sentiment for the preservation of the dry laws, both state and national, and the other was in opposition to the playing of professional baseball on Sunday.
 The two-day meeting was one of the best in the history of the organization, according to the Rev. R. W. Prevost, of Andrews, who spent the time he was here with his brother, R. L. Prevost, manager of the Unagusta Manufacturing company, of Hazelwood. Mr. Prevost said the theme running through the entire conference was "Sounding a higher spiritual note in the ministry."
 The session Tuesday morning was motivated by the high notes sounded by Professor P. L. Elliott, of Cullowhee, on the "General Scriptural Background for Effective Preaching," and the Rev. J. B. Owen, of Asheville, in his sermon closing the conference hour. The program for the morning was especially strong and interesting.
JUSTICE SPEAKS
 Beginning at 9 o'clock, the conference entered into its three-hour session with a 15 minute devotional service led by the Rev. A. V. Joyner, of Canton. At 9:15 o'clock the Rev. A. I. Justice, of Hendersonville, spoke on the "Preservation of Western North Carolina Baptist History." He was followed by Professor Elliott with an address on the "Scriptural Background for Effective Preaching."
 Monday night, Rev. Mr. Olive, of Mars Hill, and a returned missionary from China, delivered a stirring message to the conference. Monday afternoon Rev. W. H. Ford, of Hendersonville, and others, gave an interesting program for the second session of the conference which opened at 11:00 o'clock Monday morning.
 From 50 to 75 Baptist ministers from Western North Carolina attended some or all of the sessions.

Annual Medal Being Offered By D. A. R.

On February 22 the Daughters of the Revolution of the Dorcas Bell Love Chapter will offer the medal which they have offered for more than 20 years to the boy giving the best patriotic oration. Twelve boys have joined the group of contestants. Each is limited to five minutes so that all may appear in final contest. Many of these boys have competed before. The new entrants are enthusiastic so we expect a worth while contest.

Facts Worth Knowing

MESSAGE NO. 1
 Patrons have frequently told us that most folks would appreciate knowing more about funeral service, and also suggestions on what to do in time of need.
 We have long hesitated to do anything about it, however, for fear of offending the sensitive feeling of those we have been privileged to serve. But it has always been our sincere desire to render every possible service, and as we learned more and more of the appreciation for this sort of information in other communities, we concluded that the people of Waynesville and vicinity are just as much interested.
 It is a fact that most folks who call on us, know practically nothing about burial goods, or about the many things that must be done when need arises.
 Our business policy has always been to hold our expenses of doing business down to the very lowest possible figure and thereby pass the saving on to our patrons. And it is, indeed, gratifying that circumstances developed that made it possible for us to readjust our over head expenses so that we have the much needed facilities of our funeral home without added cost to doing business.
 Of course, we try to relieve our patrons of every possible detail of responsibility, in order to lighten their burden of grief. We advise them as sincerely as we would wish to be advised under similar circumstances. But this experience so frequently repeated, has firmly convinced us that every person should find out about these things before necessity arises, while the mind is free to compare values carefully and to judge wisely.
 In our future messages we shall try to give you some of this important information. However, if you would prefer to get the information first-hand we to ask any questions, we shall be delighted to have you visit our funeral home.

Groundhog To Look For Shadow Today

Today is the day when Mr. Fuzzy Groundhog causes the whole world to sit up and watch him for the weather report for the coming six weeks. When Mr. Groundhog ventures out today from his winter home, he will determine whether winter is over, or if there yet remains 6 more weeks of the cold season.
 When Mr. Groundhog peeps out from his earthen home he will immediately look for his shadow, if he sees it he will scurry back to his winter quarters and wait patiently (7) until the remaining six-weeks of winter have passed.
 On the other hand if Ol Sol is hidden behind the clouds Mr. Groundhog will remain on top of terra firma and prepare for the spring season which is near at hand, so he predicts.
