

Judge Alley's Charge To The Grand Jury

an innocent woman under the promise of marriage. I believe the crime that may be without pardon from God or man, is the invasion of the home and its destruction by lust or pollution. With the downfall of the wife, the mother, the sister, or the daughter, the home itself crumbles to ashes and the sun of life's happiness ceases to shine.

"What can be baser than the man, who with his superior will and stronger and more dominant personality, steals the heart of a confiding young girl only to debase her and then leave her to make the remainder of life's journey alone in a cold and unfeeling world.

"Like the noxious reptile, base and loathsome as the snake that, with undulating form and baleful crest in the Garden of Eden, lured the trusting woman to the tree of knowledge and accomplished the first seduction; so the seducer, with his diabolical air and false promises, and hellish wiles and deep-laid craft and vice, pollutes and destroys the innocence of a trustful and virtuous girl.

"Such a man is worse than a murderer, because he kills the soul as well as the body of his victim.

"The pity of it is that this crime does not stop with the ruin of the girl and the punishment of her despoiler, but embraces the entire family.

"Gentlemen, we can bear anything but dishonor; anything but to hear our names and the names of our loved ones associated with shame and mocked at every scorn.

"Another crime closely related to the crime of seduction is the slander of an innocent woman.

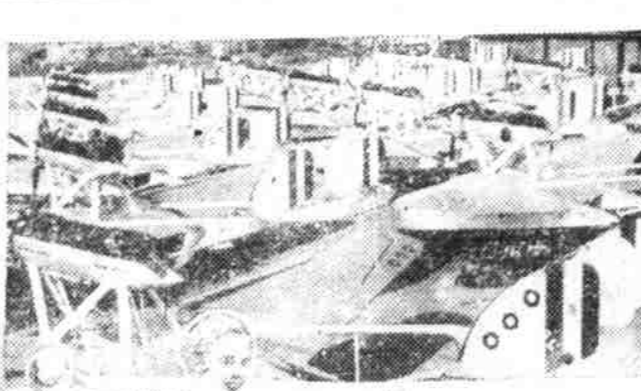

"I read some years ago a decision written by the late Chief Justice Walter Clark in which he made the statement that North Carolina at that time was the only state in the Union and the only country in the world in which slander of an innocent woman was made a crime by statute. If this be true, I think there is nothing in our State's fair escutcheon that entitled it to greater honor than this.

"Slander, like seduction, is far-reaching in its devastating effects. When the tall grass and taller weeds of the prairie are dead and dry you may drop among them a lighted match, and first a little blaze and little cinders are seen. A little space of air is rarified and then as the wind fans it, it grows larger and brighter and hotter, the smoke grows denser and blacker, until finally vast sheets of flame, whose fiery tongues leap with crackling roar, fly before the wind to blaze away to the horizon and deluge the reeking plain in one open fire.

"And so the unconscionable lion gives an unfounded and malicious charge of incontinency against an innocent woman; then it is repeated from lip to lip, usually with embellishments and exaggerations, and the charge travels, and, invested with high procreative powers, it multiplies into an army, every platoon of which is commanded by a demon which divides families, separates neighbors, destroys the peace of communities, sows dissensions in the church, ruins and blasts reputation of a good woman in one wide, wasting destruction, and she is condemned, forever thereafter, without any fault of her own, to live under the shadow of a dark and lowering cloud.

"Upon the preservation of her purity and good name rests the destiny of our race.

"It is written into our law that the court shall protect her from the vile tongue of the slanderer and the wicked wiles of those who believe that lust is more beautiful than love; and if you find evidence that either of these crimes have been committed in this county, make presentments, so that the guilty parties may be brought into court and taught that the courts of this country regard the good name of our womanhood as a jewel without price.

"Millions of good citizens are opposed to prohibition in any form. Millions recognize that liquor is an ever-present evil, sincerely believe that real temperance would be promoted by legalizing the liquor traffic and placing it under strict regulation and control.

"Millions more, equally, but not more sincere, believe not only in the principle, but in the efficiency of our prohibition laws. But these are questions of policy—of public policy, which do not concern you and me while this court is sitting.

"Every good man will agree that the liquor evil is an ever-present one everywhere, and is perhaps more far-reaching in its consequences to those who become its slaves, than any other evil.

"It is the great, withering curse of the human race, and serves but to destroy. Those who surrender to it have sealed their doom already, and set the date for their own overthrow. It is a vice that casts its shadows athwart the sunniest souls, blasts the fairest youths in our lands, fills homes, once happy with broken hearts, turns large estates into streams of waste which for a time flow on in merry glee, but turn to shoals and cataracts and end at last in swamps of misery.

"It is said that it is God's mighty plan to develop perfect human beings, superior to circumstance, victorious over fate. But the plan has not reached its full fruition because beneath the roots of the tree of knowledge of good and evil is the source of a noisy spring bubbling with the escape of baneful gasses, and in whose dark and gloomy depths a deadly poisonous serpent dwells. Ever engaging, its volume always increasing, this river flows, all around the world. Onward and still onward it sweeps.

"Upon its banks, no flowers grow, no foliage waves, but perpetual desolation pitches its pavilions upon the sterile strand, relieved here and there by bold and barren rocks, upon which weeping spirits, sit and curse the day that they were born.

"In all the universe, there is no other river so wide, so deep, so swift as this.

"Its floods are black, its waves are towering, and it goes surging and tearing on to the bottomless lake, while everlasting lightnings pencil every billowy crest with angry fire, and hell's terrific thunders bound from bank to bank and burst with awful crash, leaving desolation and death on every hand.

"Surely, such a river might roll on forever unvisited by mortal man. Yet its shores are lined from source to mouth with human wrecks.

"They crowd upon one another to gain its edges, all sexes, all classes and all conditions of life.

"The mother bedecks her daughter's brow, and side by side they leap into the boisterous flood.

"The young maiden, with happiness in her heart and laughter on her lips, runs and jumps into the boiling current and passes from sight like a beautiful flower at the first touch of the North winds' breath.

"The young men, whose heart throbs high with hope, and whose eye flashes with honest purposes and noble resolve, steps over the brink and is lost forever in the swirling tide.

"If men and women would but understand that there is no sin without its wages; that there is no vice without its penalties and that the sooner or later the flaming sword of Retribution will overtake and strike down those who persist in treading the paths of wrong and crime, what a different world we would have."

Relieves Women's Pains

Here is an example of how Cardui has helped thousands of women:

"I was very thin and pale," writes Mrs. F. H. Scott, of Roanoke, Va. "I suffered from weakness and a severe pain in my back. This pain unnerved me, and I did not feel like doing my work. I did not care to go places, and felt worn, tired, day after day.

"My mother had taken Cardui, and on seeing my condition she advised me to try it. I have never regretted doing so. I took three bottles and it built me up. I gained in weight, my color was better and the pain left my back. I am stronger than I had been in some time."

Cardui is sold by local druggists.

DIZZINESS

relieved by Black-Draught

"I decided to take Theford's Black-Draught, as I had been having bilious spells," writes Mr. Chas. E. Stevens, of Columbus, Ind. "When I get bilious, I feel sleepy and tired and do not feel like doing my work. I get awfully dizzy. I know then that I had better take something. After I found how good Black-Draught is that is what I have used. I guess it rids me of the bile, for I feel better—don't feel like I am dropping off to sleep every time I sit down. That, to me, is a very bad feeling. Now you can get Black-Draught in the form of a SYRUP, for CHILDREN."
