Believes Sales Tax Will Help Farmers

Adoption of the general sales tax has been fortunate for North Carolina's farm population.

"The general objection to the general sales tax is that a greater proportion of the income of the poorer classes must be absorbed in the tax than is true for the more wealthy class even though the wealthy class buys more as individuals," said Joe E. Hull, North Carolina State College assistant in farm management research.

"However, this objection is taken care of in the exemption of the basic food commodities as these articles compose the greater bulk of purchases made by the poorer classes and today the agricultural population might be so classed," he asserted.

Basic commodities exempted are, wheat flour, corn meal, fresh meat, lard, sorghum molasses, salt, sugar and coffee. The sales tax does not apply to the sale of products from farms, forests, or mines when such sales are made by those who helped in the production of such products in their original state or conditioning their preparation for sale, but the tax does apply to the resale of such products. Commercial fertilizer is also exempt—an inspection tax is already paid.

"The expense of a general sales tax in this State, agriculturally, is much less than if the ad valorem tax had been increased," Hull said.

"North Carolina's population is about 70 per cent rural, therefore our general sales tax favors the agricultural class not only as farmers, but as a whole. This enactment was sponsored as a means of providing more revenue for the public schools, and with the large percentage of rural population, it is readily seen that the agricultural children will receive greater benefit from the tax."
