CHAPTER THREE
TO ROYAL BLOOD

"He isn't a baron," he speaks French and German and Italian and Spanish and has royal blood in his veins."

"I don't care if he's got a royal flush in his kidneys!"

"Don't you talk that way about Hugo!"

"Get him! Get him! Stop his face! They'll let you fall for that kind of stuff!"

"The Marquis started in front of Brogan and demanded: 'Were you speaking about me?'"

"Yes, I'm speaking about you," Brogan replied.

"You stop!"

"Lola, her father came beaming at me, she's his daughter!"

"Well, well, good morning everybody!" said Pops expansively. Then he became aware of the angry words being exchanged by his daughter and Marquis and Brogan and rushed over to them as the stage crew drew up to watch the argument, rather bored as though it was a matter of frequent occurrence.

"Children, children, what is this?" he asked. "Daughter, what—"

"And here's old Colonel Starbuckle," shouted Brogan. "What a morning's work this is going to be!"

"James, my boy—harumph, I don't understand—"

"This hour seems to infer I'm unwelcome on this set," said the Marquis.

"Jane," said Pops. "You mustn't quarrel with Hugo. There's no—"

"Wait a minute," yelled Brogan. "I'm not going to have an old lunk like you telling me what to do!"

"This remark is unbecomingly quarrel with Hugo, there's no—"

"Pops, Brogan—"

"I thought I kicked him off my set for good last year," said Brogan, pointing at Pops.

"As my daughter's business manager, I've the right—"

"Hah! Business manager!" said Brogan.

"I demand an apology," said the

"Go and tell that glorified barber to get off my set," said the director.

"I know. Play for you—and but tons for me."

He put his arms about her and she felt the old thrill of his physical nervousness. "What do you say, Lola?"

She, pushed him away and said drily: "I say we go to work."

Brogan followed her confidently out of the dressing room, sure he could get her back, but when he saw her go quickly to an elegantly dressed small, dark man whom he knew was the Marquis di Binelli die Pisa, his brow clouded with anger.

"Oh, Hugo, darling," she was saying hanging on to his arm. "I am sorry, I don't know how it happened!"

"It was very embarrassing," fumed the Marquis. "To be stopped and questioned by an ordinary porter!"

"Oh, I know, Hugo." She saw Brogan glaring at them. "Do you know Jim Brogan?"

"We've met once or twice," said Brogan stiffly. "All right! Clear the stage! Give me all your lights, please!"

Brogan, after getting the lights arranged to his satisfaction, backed up to the director's chair beside the camera and stood on the box, of the Marquis to whom Lola had given the chair at a point of vantage from which to watch the retake. At the Marquis' muffled exclamation, Brogan said: "Sorry, sorry! Didn't know you were there."

"Hugo, darling, does it hurt?" cried Lola, running to him. "He didn't mean to do it. Let me see Hugo!"

"Please, please," said Brogan, disgustedly, while the Marquis assured Lola in an icily angry voice that it was all right. Lola continued to fuss over the Marquis.

"Whenever Miss Burns is ready!" Brogan bawled out to nobody in particular.

"All right," she called, patted the Marquis' head and dashed upon the set, climbing into the rain barrel. Brogan began explaining the action to her, but broke off as he found she was not listening, but gesturing and smiling off stage to the Marquis. With a snort Brogan threw the script into the rain barrel and walked on the set. Lola climbed out of the barrel and followed him.

"Now, what are you mad about?" Mockingly polite, Brogan said: "You'll have to ask your friend to leave my set."

"What do you mean? You set?"

"Just what I say. Go and tell that glorified barber to take his

JUDGE ALLEY

A clipping from a recent issue of the Journal-Sentinel, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Winston-Salem is happy to have an opportunity to become better acquainted with Judge Felix E. Alley, of Waynesville, who is presiding over the present term of Forsyth County Superior Court. We have known Judge Alley by reputation for nearly a quarter of a century. He came, as an orator, washed as long ago. As a student speaker in his active mountaineer, we have heard that he had no peer when he used to be in politics up in the old Tenth District. He is comparatively new on the bench, but is a seasoned lawyer of large experience and is making a most favorable impression in his first term in Forsyth.

Valley, who is now Mr. A. A. Niles of Asheville and Shelby.

Those who heard Judge Alley's eloquent charges to the grand jury here were charmed by his rare ability to paint pictures with words, and will not be surprised to learn that he is the author of a book, that has lived forty years and is even more popular today than it was almost a generation ago.

Oh! I Wish We Had Our Telephone Back

IT'S a lot of fun, of kind of life, trying to get along without a telephone. Out of touch with friends— seldom invited out, and unable to call friends to invite them over for an evening.

"It just doesn't pay," said a customer recently. "I want my telephone back. The business and comfort waves which were worth far more than the small amount we saved by trying to do without it."

When you compare the numerous advantages that a telephone in your home affords with the small cost you'll probably agree too, that it really doesn't pay to try to do without it.

You can afford the few pennies a day that a telephone costs. Order yours put back now. Just call the telephone business office or give your order to any telephone employe.
