W. T. Lee Is Back, But Is Not Retiring At The Present

in about 200 words:

"I was elected as a member of the commission in 1910 and came to the commission in January, 1911. My record is well known and I am content to leave it with the people of the state with whom I have come in contact in connection with the duties of the office. I am content also to leave that record with those with whom I have served to this date both on the public service commission and on the tax commission. I want the people of the state to know that I greatly appreciate and value their support in the past. I have never aspired to any position in the whole of my life that they have not given me. I have often remarked that I was a good servant, that I liked people and I liked to serve them.

"I want to thank the people of Raleigh for their kindnesses to me since I have been here. I have found them to be real people and I have become very much attached to them.

"I have had a number of inquiries as to my plans for the future. At this time I can only say that I expect to return to my home at Waynesville, where I shall be able to give more attention to matters which I have had an interest in for a number of years.

The Mountaineer asked Mr. Lee about politics. He refused to discuss politics other than to say he was still vitally interested. It was learned, however, that there is a possibility that he will be a candidate for either the legislature or congress in the June primary.

Farmers Federation, Inc., Begins Operation In County Today should place their orders through either the Waynesville or Canton warehouse.

Garden seeds in varieties suited to the mountain region will be carried in large quantity by the Haywood County warehouses. Seed bins are now being installed to handle this line, which is featured at all Federation warehouses. Other farm supplies to be handled include field seeds, feeds for stock and poultry, fertilizer, implements and miscellaneous farm items."

George Brown will continue as manager of the Waynesville warehouse, while Boy Ferrell will continue as manager at Canton. C. F. Rinehart will also continue with the larger organization, while H. A. Osborne president of the Haywood County Farmers Federation, will go in as a director of the Farmers Federation Inc. under the charter provision which provides that each county shall be represented by at least two members on the board of directors, according to Mr. McClure.

Some Outstanding Things In The Life Of Mr. D. M. Killian

(By J. A. FRANCIS)

In the passing of D. M. Killian to the great beyond Waynesville and Haywood County have lost one of their most highly honored and respected citizens. His passing should receive more than mere passing notice.

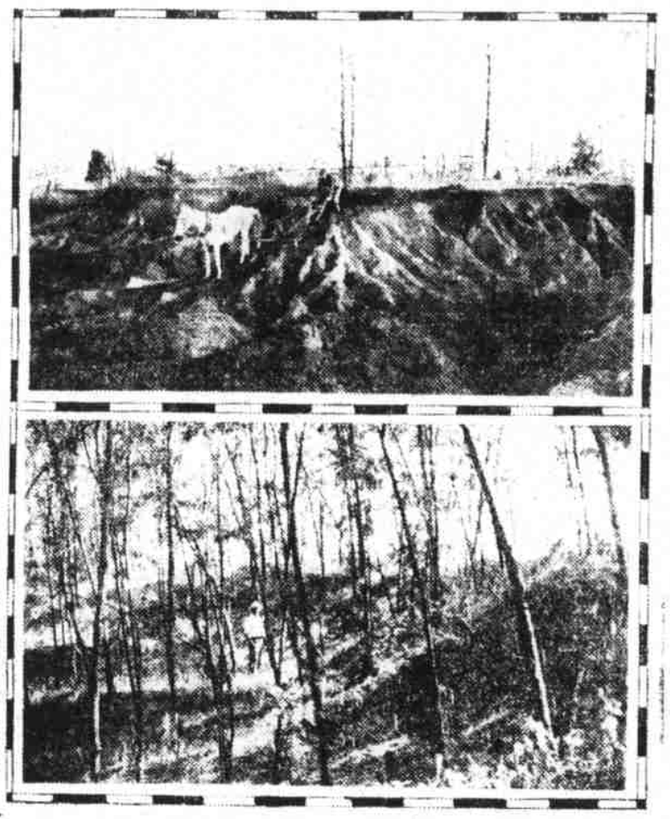
Coming from Transylvania county to Haywood in 1872, young and unmarried, Mr. Killian soon became identified with the best interests of the county. He entered into business with J. L. Morgan in purchasing the entire interest of J. C. Smathers in the milling and mercantile business in Clyde. They operated a general milling business, grinding wheat, corn, buckwheat, and other grain for the public and hundreds of bushels of meal were hauled on wagons to Greenville, South Carolina, and other points south where the Killian-Morgan brand found a ready cash market.

In connection with the milling and mercantile business Mr. Killian and Mr. Morgan operated a saw mill, sawing lumber into building material for the public the market for which was unusually good at that time. They later installed the first circular saw used in the county, an improvement over the old style, which attracted quite a bit of interest among the people. The first fatal accident happened while Louis Cunningham was watching the saw in operation and became dizzy, lost his ballance, fell in front of the saw, and was instantly killed. They later installed machinery for dressing and preparing lumber for building purposes.

Sometime after coming to this county Mr. Killian was united in marriage to Haseltine, the accomplished and highly respected daughter of Walter Brown, who proved to be a companion of great merit. They located at Clyde where Mr. Killian was not only interested in his business affairs but devoted a portion of his time and means to the cause of Temperance, Education, and Church Extension. A communicant of the Presbyterian church, he was also [illegible] a consistent member. He took a prominent part in the erection of the church near Clyde known as Killian Chapel. He cut, hauled, sawed and prepared all material from the [illegible] donated by G. M. Green for the church, with Dr. H. N. Wells as a partner, entered into the goods business in Clyde, remaining in this about two years. After selling out his business in Clyde, he moved to his farm near Waynesville. With T. Y. Bridges as a partner he installed machinery for carding, spinning, coloring and weaving wool and cotton into yarns, blankets, and did a general exchange business for several years, which was a great convenience to the people and profitable to the firm. At the same time leaving the manufacturing business in charge of Mr. Bridges, [illegible] manager, Mr. Killian and Mr. Green [illegible] the logging business, having and shipping [illegible] about one season. He finally disposed of all his outside interests except having [illegible] scales for the accommodation of [illegible] to the county. He was also [illegible] in the Masonic Order and a ruling Elder in the Presbyterian Church. He was active in building the Presbyterian church in Waynesville and when the church was organized in Hazelwood he was a charter member and spent time and means in its erection, acted as superintendent, and was active in all its interests.

One special hobby of Mr. Killian's was that of fox hunting. He was a member of the Fox Hunting Club but he was always a gentleman. It has often been said by those who were his associates that he never became excited or lose his self respect and use language that he would not use in the presence of his mother, wife, children or children gentleman.

From Gullies To Forest In 12 Years



The washing away of the Tennessee valley's topsoil wealth, in some instances almost unbelievable for generations, is now being combatted by land owners of the section in cooperation with their county agent and the Tennessee Valley Authority, in both fields and forests by the most effective and economical methods yet employed by government experts.

Warfare on soil erosion takes two forms: readjustment of farming practices, and the use of practical forestry methods. The necessity for checking erosion is similarly two-fold. From the farmer's standpoint, erosion represents a considerable annual loss of the fertility of the soil from which he draws his living. Engineers are concerned with the problem of erosion because deposits of silt reduce the usefulness of reservoirs created by such structures as Wilson dam at Muscle Shoals, Joe Wheeler dam 15½ miles above it, and the Norris dam near Knoxville—the latter two now under construction by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Engineers estimate that storage capacity of the Wilson dam pool has been reduced 10 per cent in less than a decade. At such a rate, the investment in storage reservoirs would be wiped out in the course of years, whereas, the dams themselves are constructed to stand for many centuries.

New Methods Used

The methods of combatting erosion perhaps most familiar to farmers are the building of terraces on sloping lands and the piling of brushwood in gullies. Nowadays, farmers of the Tennessee Valley are making additional use of vines, bushes and saplings by practicing forestry methods of erosion.

The accompanying "before-and-after" photographs, taken in West Tennessee, prove what can be done by such methods. Picture No. 1 shows a farmer plowing down a badly washed piece of land during the winter season when he has time for such odd jobs as erosion control. Picture No. 2 was taken 12 years later. The same spot now shows, instead of bare subsoil incapable of producing anything, a fine stand of black locust which will be cut for fence posts in a few years. In addition, yearly layers of fallen leaves and other decaying vegetation are building up a new and fertile topsoil so that future tree growth will be speeded.

Successful Projects Visited

These photographs were exhibited during a recent conference at Jackson, Tennessee, of foresters from Tennessee, Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio, Missouri and Mississippi which was attended by Edward C. M. Richards, chief forester of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The subject of the meeting was the part that practical forestry plays in checking soil erosion. A two-day field trip, including such successful projects as the one pictured, demonstrated conclusively that the forester is a valuable ally of the farmer.

Forestry methods similar to those employed by the West Tennessee farmer will be used where appropriate by the Tennessee Valley Authority on approximately 100,000 acres of land surrounding the Norris dam reservoir. Already these methods are being practiced, by contract with the owners, on 25,000 acres of such lands.

In addition, the Authority is urging farmers of the Norris dam watershed to build terraces, fill in gullies, and plant sod-forming crops—not to prevent the Norris dam pool from filling with silt but to improve and enrich their own lands.

Modern Quarters Provided For City Fire Department

[illegible] where the city police now [illegible] just next to the present equipment the equipment was composed of a hand reel, hose and buckets. In the fall of 1928 the department was moved in the building occupied until last week.

At the time the move was made an old Reo truck was made into a fire truck by O. L. Briggs. The old Reo is now being used by the street department.

The worst fire that Waynesville has had was on May 2 1927 when a drug store, cafe theatre and five and ten cent store were destroyed. The total damage was said to have been around $75,000. The fire department from Canton came to the rescue. The buildings that were destroyed were where the Waynesville Pharmacy, Denton's Hardware and W. W. N. C. Cafe are now located.

The Waynesville fire department [illegible] department and eight [illegible] are connected in Waynesville in case of a fire the department [illegible] the various fire alarm boxes. The department is [illegible] great aid to the fire department in that they read the meter readers [illegible] in close contact with the residents of the town and know where each person lives.

W. L. Hannah, Jr., is chairman of the fire department committee on the board of aldermen.

The fire department is under the direction of S. H. Stevenson, chief; O. L. Briggs, assistant chief and Lawrence Kerley, driver and fireman. The department has the following volunteer firemen:

C. V. Hill, John West, John Boyd, Paul Walker, Bill Cole, Zeb Brackett, Tom Ray, Will Strange, Francis Massie, Walter Mehaffey, and Bradley Mehaffey.

J. H. Way is treasurer of the fire department.

Attention was called to the fact [illegible] the public is invited to inspect the quarters at any time.

A request was made by Mr. Stevenson that persons wanting to call any of the fire department would please call number 154 and only in case of emergency use the phone number 30.
