

Nobody's Business

By GEE MCGEE

I was invited out the other evening, not out of the house, but out to dinner. The lady who invited me didn't know that I wasn't trained to court in high society; she possibly had heard that I could sing, and that encouraged her to have me to dinner. (It was stag, but the "boss" did all of the inviting.)

I arrived ahead of time. That's possibly one of my faults; always in a hurry. (I bet I'll beat my own corpse to the cemetery by 30 minutes.) I didn't see any light in the setting-room, so I parked 2 houses down the street and waited for some of the other famous guests to enter first. They soon entered, and so did I.

I gave the front-door chauffeur my hat and coat. He told them off there wasn't any place to hang them in that room. I took a seat by a prominent lawyer; he was so prominent he represented all of the "co-operations" in our state. He talked a right smart and I listened very well for him not to be a woman; I have been trained (at home) to listen attentively to women.

The chauffeur came in about 9:15 p. m. and announced "Dinner is served." There were 2 waiters (colored), and I think I heard 2 other servants in the kitchen. This was a stag dinner, thank goodness. Now I didn't touch a drop. It was my seat promptly, and the other soon followed suit. Then I began to worry about being asked to ask the blessing, but they were so inebriated in society, they didn't have any blessing.

I took the napkin and spread it out on my lap, like the judge did. It was as large as my shirt-sleeve. There was a string of silverware at my right as long as my arm and one at my left nearly as long. I knew that etiquette demanded that I use them as they were laid out, but my elbow got in the wrong place and mixed them up into a good wood-jogger. I watched the judge, but he didn't know very much either about anything except law.

After dessert and a little extra cup of coffee had been stretched in and served, I discovered that I had eaten my salad with the acetate spoon, and had cut my butter with the salad fork and had sheered my "spat-on-jacket" with a carving knife and had used 2 forks in cutting my steak, instead of 1 fork and had drained 2 pieces, 1 fork and 2 knives on the floor at my feet, and that there were 3 of 4 little items of tableware that I had not found any need for at all. At home I use only 3 implements, viz., fork and knife and spoon. I don't find anybody in my crowd know any more about table manners than I do, not even the boss. He was a regular gentleman in my opinion.

FLAT ROCK IS GETTING BACK ON THE GOLD STANDARD
The rock, a 12 lb. 1934, does not add to the value of the gold, but it is a very good counter that gold has been struck out of in 1874. It is a very good counter that gold has been struck out of in 1874. It is a very good counter that gold has been struck out of in 1874.

He kept everything a secret till he bought it upon the hickory springs and set it for $8, and he commenced to dig here and there with a spade and shovel, and every body thought he was looking for fishing worms, but his mind was on more valuable insects, viz., gold.

He was showing a gold nugget to the streets today as big as your wife's fist and gold sparkled in your eyes when he held it in the sun. He said it was not solid gold, as it had some silver and possibly diamonds in it, and he had a small percentage of smag-ghas which had to be in it before gold could be formed.

Mr. Spockles says he will offer gold mining stock for sale in 2 weeks, but will not sell any close around flat rock, but will go off about 250 miles and dispose of some, it seems that homelocks do not have no faith in anything around close to their home. He said he might take in a few small local stockholders to sign the stock with him.

Mr. Spockles has been able to get some crooked at the store here since he truck gold, and also the boarding house is going to let him stay at the regular rate and he will pay up in full as soon as he gets rid of a few shares of mine, he will make its par value 18; that looks real cheap. It will be bordered stock with a gold seal, so he says, it should boom our little town up a right smart, and will help use the tide of war a boys.

A wealthy westerner, financial and social leader in his locality, was asked by a visitor: "Why do you remain in a one-horse town like this?" "Perhaps," was the modest answer, "it is because I happen to be the horse."

Boss: "What does this mean Jim? Why aren't you carrying those bricks?"
Worker: "I ain't feeling so well, I am all tremble."
Boss: "Oh, are you? Then just get busy with that sand sieve."

The manager and the chief clerk were discussing a new typist. "What do you think of her?" asked the manager. "How is she doing her work?" "The chief clerk looked a little doubtful. "Well, I don't know," he said, "but she spells atrociously." "Really," said the manager. "She must be pretty good, then, I wouldn't spell it!"
