Doyle Alley Is Named President Of Young Demos.

Governor Ehringhaus Pictures State As Having Gotten On Feet Once More

Doyle Alley, local attorney, was elected by acclamation as president of the Young Democratic Clubs of North Carolina in the closing business session of their annual convention held in Asheville last Saturday.

Mr. Alley succeeds Mrs. May Thompson Eagle of High Point, retiring president. Alley was vice president of the organization the past year. Miss Mabel Penny, of Ware county, was elected vice president.

The convention adopted numerous resolutions. The one of greatest concern and interest to the group was that advocating "an adequate system of liquor control" for the State. Other resolutions endorsed the present Democratic administration of President Roosevelt to Congress, the representatives, the governor and the retiring organization pledged and advocated much social legislation.

Governor Ehringhaus drew a graphic picture of North Carolina's struggle during the past two or three years to see that the State is now on its feet again and that, due to the sales tax—a last resort—the budgets have been balanced and many of the State have been saved from losing entirely.

"In the sixty days of 1933, the depression had reached its most critical point. Governor Ehringhaus thinks were closing. North Carolina was the second highest state in the Union in idleness in the United States. North Carolina was running behind $50,000,000 annually, there was a deficit of $15,000,000, we owed the country $12,250,000 and were paying six per cent interest on it, there was no money in the treasury, we were overdrawn $4,000,000 in our highway funds, our notes were being called, no hope could be seen and it was a dark day, indeed.

"I want to thank that group of men that stood up the Legislature for the right work at that time. They cut the expense of the government more than 30 per cent. Throughout the state, there could be heard suggestions that we cut the schools still further, that we repudiate our debts and that we let the land continue to carry the tax burden.

"All of these we decided against and I told the Legislature if they could find some way other than the same has to do so. They passed the bill and the day was saved in the only way at hand. It was an emergency measure. None of us like it, but it was the only way.

The governor spoke feelingly about the regard in which North Carolina is held by the Nation. He pointed out that the state has paid every cent it owes and will continue to do so.

"Where my state's honor is at stake, my honor is at stake," he said. "As long as I have anything to do with the government of this state, she will pay every cent she owes."

"No American may look abroad today without rejoicing that he is an American citizen," Senator Bailey said in his address, "Conditions may appear hard here compared with conditions a few years ago, but compared with conditions abroad we are so much better off that notwithstanding our plight we can rejoice.

"Democracy still prevails in our land. The people rule. Democracy put the Roosevelt administration in power—Democracy in orderly process not revolution. We are undergoing great changes of Democracy; they are in the interest of the people, and they rest upon the will of the people.

"Abroad the shock of the depression has uprooted the governments, reversed the processes of democracy and destroyed liberty.

"All of Europe stands under the menace of war. The mind revolts against the news from Germany and Austria. Russia and Japan exist under constant threats of war.

"On the other hand our problems are at worst only the problems of economies. And our processes are only the processes of peace, of orderly experience, of Democracy. We know that our President and our public servants generally are working for us and with us in the common objectives of human progress.

"It is our task to rebuild at home and to pursue a course that will never again involve us in the controversies of Old World nations. We will deal with their peoples, for the world is part of our market, but we will not deal with them as parties to a war. We ought, and I feel sure the President will make it clear that once a war is started we will not become involved in it directly or indirectly. We know that our policy of supplying the means of carrying on war to the nations engaged in war in 1914-1916 finally entangled us. Never again should Americans be permitted to seek wealth after that manner. We ought now before any war shall start make it clear to all at home and abroad that we will not deliver munitions and arms to any nation at war; that we will give them no credits for war; that we will ship no arms to warring nations. If we put them at once on the cash and carry basis.

He has made a study of the life of bear and deer in the area, and has looked for wild turkey but so far has not found any.

The purpose of the park service is to eventually have all the wild life in the park that was there when the first white settlers came to this section. One of the questions Mr. Fleetwood is trying to find the answer to is to what extent, if any, the park area is a [illegible] of deer throughout the state.

Mr. Fleetwood is from Indiana and is being assisted by other members of the park service who are interested in fishing.

War In Europe Is Almost Impossible Says Lowell Thomas

Noted Author, Traveler And Newspaperman Heard By Large Crowd At Lake Junaluska

Lowell Thomas, famous radio commentator, author, newspaper correspondent, and world traveler, said Saturday night, in an interview that war is almost impossible in Europe, "simply because none of the countries has anything to gain except German."

Mr. Thomas commented on the European situation prior to the delivery of a lecture on "Adventures Around the World and on the Air" before a large audience composed of Junaluskans and persons from Waynesville, Canton, Sylva, Asheville, and other Western North Carolina communities. The address was delivered in the Junaluska auditorium under auspices of the Methodist assembly.

In commenting during the interview on the European situation Mr. Thomas said, "many of the Germans would like to have Austria as a part of their empire. But France, England, and Italy are too powerful to see this come about. There is no prospect of war in Europe. There might have been war had Dollfuss' followers been much weaker than they turned out to be.

"It is rather difficult to say that the events that are taking place in Austria point to a striking defeat for Chancellor Adolph Hitler, of Nazi, Germany. We can not tell because we are not thoroughly acquainted with the situation.

"Possibly some of Hitler's men got out of control Wednesday when they made their 'putsch' on the Austrian Chancellor, which resulted in the death of Dollfuss. And Hitler's Nazi leaders in Austria did their work Wednesday probably without the German chancellor's knowledge.

"The fast place-taking events in Austria today are being viewed by the world in general through the press, and thereby we are analyzing the situation from that point.

"There will be no effect on the whole of Europe if Italy invades Austria, as they plan if the Austrian government fails to conquer its foes. The effect will be only temporary at least. It will be electrical on the press of the world should Italy invade Austria.

"Czechoslovakia would be the only country aroused by the invasion and would at once mass their forces on the border ready to await the first sign of war to their country.

"What Italy wants," Mr. Thomas said, "is a buffer state between them and Germany. But Italy doesn't want to see little Austria gobbled up, that's the reason Mussolini is looking out for the Austrians.

"It was a master stroke on the part of Hitler in appointing Vice Chancellor von Papen minister to Austria, I think he is the one man who can heal the breach between Austria and Germany.

"If von Papen meets with success in his effort to bring about peace with Austria and Nazi Germany he will go back to Germany amid great glory.

MAY SUCCEED HITLER

"Because he is an ardent Catholic and a non-Nazi, he will meet the situation in Austria with a firm and leading hand that will no doubt bring about peace between the two countries. If von Papen and Hitler don't

A crew of from 40 to 50 people have been busily engaged working until late at night to can the berries that have been brought in. Monday was the peak day for the cannery when 11,589 pounds were received at the cannery. Tuesday was somewhat less, which 6,121 pounds were delivered.

Until Wednesday morning a total of 6,120 No 2 cans had been packed away. The large size cans are the only ones that have been canned thus far.

The price of blackberries remains at five cents a pound which is said to average about 50 cents a gallon.

Workmen are now installing equipment which will automatically wash, cook, cover and cool the berries which the cannery will pack this season. It is expected that the packing of berries will get under way the latter part of the week.

The blackberries received during the past seven days are as follows: July 25, 1,163; 26, 3,434; 27, 2,445; 28, 2,500; 30, 11,589; 31, 6,121; August 1, about 12,000 pounds.

Golfers Swarming On Local Course

Are the tourists playing golf this year?

That question was asked J. M. Long, owner of the Waynesville Golf Course this week, and his quick answer was simply: "Just about 100 per cent more than last year. These are the golf playingest people this year I ever saw. One family decided to stay a week longer than they had planned just to play golf."

Last winter Mr. Long had a large crew of men who worked the entire 18-hole course over and have gotten it into the best condition that it has ever been, and this accounts for the large patronage.

As high as 90 people have played on the local course in one day this summer.

A number of visitors have played on the course every day the weather permitted, and several have written friends in other parts of the country to come here and spend the summer and play on the course.
