Samoyed Dog Guard His Reindeer Like Shepherd The Samoyed, a semi-nomadic race of people living in northeastern Russia and Siberia—and from whom the dog derives his name—depend upon him for his life. The reindeer that supplies their food and clothing, says an authority in the Los Angeles Times. Well protected from the snow and sharp ice by thick fur between the toes, which almost covers the black pads, his spindly feet propelled by straight, heavily muscled legs, stiles well down carry him at good speed in driving and rounding up his charges. His speed and great endurance have also been advantageously utilized to furnish the sole means of transportation—for he is their sled-dog—so important to their life as food and fuel. Of the large family of Arctic dogs comprising the wolf-spitz or Pommeranian group that carry their dirty-saucer-like tails, pommer fashion, close to their backs, he has, however, the width of jaw that characterizes the chow and other Asiatic types. His powerful head is wedge shaped with a broad flat skull, muzzle of medium length and tapering fore-face into which his intelligent eyes, wide apart, are deeply set. Rims encircling the eyes are likewise black, as are also the nose and lips. With these exceptions, the dog, from the top of his sharp-eared ears, well-lined muzzle and out to the tip of his bushy tail, is pure snow white in color except for short black spots of color that appear occasionally on the face.
