Zombies
Zombie is a Haitian name meaning witch or magician, and is used by cultured negroes in Haiti to scare children. The effect of this is similar to the American expression "look out or the boggy man will get you." These zombies are said to be taken from their graves by men who want cheap labor. They take a man and fix them so that they are able to work. They presumably have no soul; their faces are expressionless, and they are evidently half understanding. It is widely believed in Haiti that it is possible to fix a dead into the bodies of dead men which will make it possible their bodies to move and act as ts.

Dog With Nine Lives
Have you ever heard the story of a dog with "nine lives"? It is told in a book of memories by Sir Es Crichton-Browne, notes a writer in the Montreal Herald. He says it is a portrait of a fox-hunting dog, a York, and the legend attached to the dog was called Rover. Rover, in 1755, suspected of madness, and confined to the gallows, he was held a quarter of an hour by the hands of the huntsman, and then thrown a coal pit 35 yards deep. Seven months later, when some men were down in the old pit, they discovered him still alive and in perfect health. He had found food and water below. Such tenacity won for him a reputation, and he became an honored member at Cannon hall, where he lived in comfort for many years.
