Unnecessary Cruelty
What is more touching than the tear-stained face of a child? Hard indeed is the heart that is not moved by the grief of a little one.

While passing down one of the side streets a few days ago, the writer came upon a boy ten years of age who was seated upon the curb holding in his lap the limp and mangled form of a little fox terrier. The child was weeping bitterly. I stopped and looked at the scene in mute sympathy. My own eyes were too full of tears and my heart of pain to speak. Finally in a voice choking with emotion, and punctuated by uncontrollable bursts of anguish, the child sobbed out his story.

His little playmate did not run to meet him, as usual when he returned from school.

He called him, but he failed to run to him, his eyes shining with love and his tail wagging. So he set out to find him. Finally he inquired of a servant whom he saw standing in a doorway, if he had seen his dog? "I seen a man in a automobile run over him dis mawnin'." De little dog was crossen de street when he hit him. De man didn't look behind, he just went on. Some more cars run over him. I went and put him in de garbage can. You'll find him out dere if you look in dat can."

The feelings of the child were outraged. Pain, grief, hatred, revenge, were all expressed in the torrent of words that followed. The child was smarting under a sense of outrage and injustice that will leave lasting scars on his mind and character.

How can motorists be so cruel, so unfeeling, so callous? It speaks badly for our boasted civilization. There are a few cases where accidents of the kind are unavoidable; but nine times out of ten, a little forethought and care on the part of the drivers would obviate them. Most dumb creatures will get out of the way if given a chance. Even if the motorist has to stop in order to save a dog's life, it is worth it. Surely this devoted friend of man is worthy of consideration.

If we could all emulate the sterling honesty and faithfulness of our dumb friends we would be better men and women.

Dogs often give their lives to save their masters. It would make us better and nobler to be kind to them.

Timely Questions And Answers On Farm Problems

Question: Should a laying mash be fed to molting hens?

Answer: Molting birds require just as much feed of all kinds as the laying birds and in most cases, they need a little more of the protein elements. In addition to the laying mash the birds should have a plentiful supply of oyster shell or ground limestone and grit before them at all times. Animal proteins, greens and succulent feeds together with the laying mash will bring the birds into laying much sooner than if the mash is left out of the ration.

Question: What is the best ration for a dry cow during the winter?

Answer: No better practical winter ration for the dry cow can be had than legume hay and corn silage together with three to five pounds of a grain ration containing around 16 per cent protein. For the last two weeks, before freshening the grain ration should be restricted to laxative grains such as wheat bran and oats. Full directions for feeding all dairy animals are contained in Extension Circular No. 193, copies of which will be mailed free upon application to the Agricultural Editor, State College.

Question: Should lime be applied to sour land in the fall or spring?

Answer: As lime is a slow acting agent fall applications will usually give best results. Broadcast the lime on newly plowed land and then run a harrow once or twice over the field to bring the lime in contact with the soil. The winter rains will cause the lime to seep into the soil. The amount to apply will depend upon the acidity of the soil and the crop to be grown the following year. See your farm agent for a test and follow his directions as to the amount of lime needed.

Louisa's Letter

LITTLE THINGS IN LIFE BRING HAPPINESS

Dearest Girls:—
Everyone in town wondered how Mary Smith put up with her husband John. He worked just about half of the time and occasionally took too much liquor. One would think from this description that Mary Smith was a very unhappy woman, but she was not. Of course, she had to do sewing on the side and the children had to do without lots of things they needed, but all of them seemed about as happy as the average family.

On the other hand, the same people envied Emily Jones, her husband, Emily had a lovely house, a nice car, the children were sent to expensive schools, and vacations were spent at the seashore, in the mountains, or abroad. Everything, apparently that heart could desire, and yet Emily had an unhappy face and the children seemed a discontented lot.

The secret of these two women's happiness and unhappiness was this: Although Mary knew that John was not much account when it came to making a living he was a very pleasant person in other respects. He never criticized anything that she did and was always proclaiming to the world what a swell manager she was. He was willing to help out around the house, though gossiness knows his wife and children would have fared better if he had been sticking to a real job, and he stayed in a good humor.

But Emily Jones had to be very particular. If things didn't go to suit Bob in the office he vented his spleen on the family. The children always wanted to see what kind of humor he was in before they opened their mouths. They knew from experience that the least thing they might do or say would cause a veritable storm of abuse enough to shatter their nerves for days. Consequently, the whole family lived under a strain. They never knew when Bob would develop a grouchy or make some sarcastic remark. Although generous enough with worldly goods, he was stingy with his praise and his smiles.

Which all goes to show that sometimes the little things of life are as important for happiness as the bigger ones.

Yours,
LOUISA.

"Homeliness" Is Young

Historians are doubtful whether the ancients had any poetic conceptions of home. The word "homeliness" did not come into English until the end of the eighteenth century.

THE CHURCH MEMBER

International Sunday School Lesson for November 18, 1934

GOLDEN TEXT: "We are members of his body." Eph. 5:30.

Lesson Text: Matt. 5:13-16; 2:41-47.

Can one be a good Christian without affiliation with any church? Surely anyone will answer the question in the negative but almost everyone would say that the average man or woman can be a far better Christian by receiving the better encouragement and inspiration which comes from proper church membership.

The two selections for our lesson text are from the New Testament. The first is a part of the Sermon on the Mount spoken by Jesus during his second year of ministry. The second passage is from Acts, following closely, recorded nearly two years later in Jerusalem, after the final departure of Jesus from this earth.

When Jesus told his disciples that they were the salt of the earth, he used this element to illustrate the preserving quality and of the essential necessity for the Christian influence in the world. As he lived among men he expected his followers to be a part of the world, redeeming and reforming it. "One of the purposes for which our Lord instituted the Christian church was that it might exercise a distinct moral influence on the society around it," says Dean R. W. Church. "Separate in idea from the world, it was to be in the world, to touch the world, and to make great changes in it."

"Another peculiarity of salt is that its presence is not as noticeable as its absence," Rev. Willis H. Butler. "We seldom think of it as long as it is an ingredient of our food, but when it is omitted we at once become aware of the fact. I sometimes wonder what the world would be like if all the Christians were suddenly to be taken out of it. People who are the salt of the earth are not always recognized and appreciated while they are with us, but how we miss them when they are gone! If the life about us is no better for our being in it, the probability is that we have lost our savor. Our seasoning power is gone."

Jesus also told his followers that they were the light of the world, and another time he reminded them that the powers of evil worked in darkness and feared the light. Christianity and the church have exerted a marvelous and profound influence upon human life and conduct during the past two thousand years. "Light is the symbol of all that is desirable," asserts Rev. A. Z. Conrad. "It is almost synonymous with life. Light represents mental illumination, hence wisdom. Light guides our footsteps and prevents stumbling. Beacon lights warn the mariner of danger, or invite him to a safe harbor. Light means life at its brightest and best."

Jesus told his listeners not to hide the light under a bushel and this is strikingly interpreted by E. Stanley Jones as follows: "A bushel is a symbol of trade, of business, of occupation. Hence Jesus warns us against putting our lighted lives under our business, so that the business becomes uppermost and snuffs out the lighted life. In a commercial age this is our chief sin. But it is possible so that the light is on top of the bushel and not under it. In that case the bushel is lighted as well as the surroundings—the business—becomes the medium of a message. This
