HERE and THERE Hilda Way Gown

I don't take the heat of the noon day sun to remind us that summer is fully on—strangers—in place of meeting our next door neighbor—or a life time friend—at the grocery counter—we are much more apt to rub elbows with a person, we have never laid eyes on before—I often find myself wondering about them—as I am sure you do—I was particularly interested in a family group at the lunch counter during the past week at a nearby cafe in the Green Tree Tea Room—they were such a nice looking normal family—father, mother and two children, a son and daughter, ages somewhere between eight and and ten.

I began to have great sympathy for the mother—it is a bitter disappointment to go on a trip and not see the things one has planned to take in—The mother was looking at one of those beautifully illustrated booklets of mountain views—that are annually published by some group in this section—I wasn't close enough to see just what—but any way she had very decided ideas—but not disagreeably so—about wanting to take in every mountain trip—but the man was fed up on mountain roads—he was evidently not accustomed to driving them—I overheard him say—"I tell you I can't drive up another one of those mountains—but as they went out the door—I overheard her say—"well if we decide to come back for a month—I expect to see everything in this country."

Seen in July copy of Reader's Digest—in the section devoted to "toward a more picturesque Speech"—the following—which caught my attention—"Each year conservation seems to take off another garment—which might well have included individuals—don't you think—Shortly after—with my mind still on the exceptional expression—I ran across this "as the years insinuate their mellow presence upon me"—which certainly has a pleasing and softening way of saying—"as I grow older."

Vesper services held in the open are always more or less impressive—perhaps there is something of finality about the close of the day that brings a "feeling of sadness, akin to pain,"—Attending the vesper services at New College on Sunday evening held on a hill overlooking the valley—with a view of the surrounding mountains—I wondered why in the summer—we don't have more out door services—using the back ground that nature has so lavishly blessed us with—that makes a perfect setting for inspiration—Hundreds of persons attend the conferences held at Lake Junaluska—for just this combination of the message of man and nature—but we natives don't make as much of it as we should—it was refreshing to hear the group at New College, most of them from New York City—singing the same old hymns and southern spirituals that are our favorites.

I understand that during the Republican convention the Democrats explained that their radios were no good—all they could get were the proceedings at Cleveland—and last week the Republicans could get nothing but Philadelphia—and the reverberation from the party in power—naturally more boisterous than those of the party so earnestly seeking a way to return to the White House—It is said that the Cleveland convention was a very sober and thrifty affair as compared to that of the Democrats—and the advocates of the New Deal—there may have been a few last hats in Cleveland, but not the 500 that it is claimed were found in Philadelphia—which the owners forgot to collect—but both parties seem to have given serious consideration to a brand new platform—with new ideas not included in the '32 campaign—economic conditions and experiments of the Roosevelt administration have developed new issues.—

Which reminds us that the second primary will be held July the 4th—and all good citizens regardless of their personal views on the subject of second contests—should still feel their responsibility to vote—so be sure to include in your celebration of the 4th—the few minutes it takes to cast your vote—for bear in mind—that it would be unworthy a true citizen of the U. S. A., on the 100th anniversary of that famous document—the Declaration of Independence—to fail to assume his part in governmental affairs.
