Hypnotist To Be At Park Theatre On Friday Night

Several Outstanding Entertainment Features Advertised By Fayssoux.

Advertised for Friday of this week at the Park Theatre, is Fayssoux, a hypnotist and telepathist, who with his company will stage a regular act in connection with the usual pictures.

Fayssoux advises that he will hypnotize a man, and place him in the window of Massie Furniture Company at 3 o'clock Friday, and that the man will remain asleep until the performance that night. Before being awakened a heavy rock will be broken on the man's chest.

A blindfold drive is also scheduled for Friday afternoon.

A member of the company, is Miss Gene Chanel, who will be blindfolded, and seated at a piano, and play any selection of music chosen by a committee in the audience, as soon as "the committee concentrates their several minds on the piece of music selected," it was said.

Another advertisement feature, will be the "Mail Bag, Trunk" escape.

A committee selected by the audience will be permitted to lock an assistant in a mail bag, place mail bag and all in a trunk, lock and tie the trunk any way they wish, so they are sure he cannot make his escape.

In three minutes they unlock the trunk and find a beautiful young lady. The assistant has made his escape and comes walking down the aisle.

This is the same identical trick that made the name Houdini Famous the world over.

PLAY

A play will be presented by the young people's union: "Bring Thou Whole Heart," at Riverside school house, Saturday night, October 2, 1937, at 7:30 o'clock.

A college professor in Kansas claims that the best jokes about Kansas are produced in Kansas. It is also claimed that the best Scotch jokes are written in Aberdeen.

Behind the Scenes in HOLLYWOOD

HOLLYWOOD—A laugh from the day's news.

Republic, which is splurging on its musical, "Manhattan Merry-Go-Round", borrowed $150,000 worth of jewels for Tamara Geva to wear in a scene. The sheriff's office was then appealed to for a man to guard the gems.

The other morning, Director Chuck Reisner lifted the deputy's watch and the puzzled officer didn't know where it was until it was returned later.

Up in Banff on a vacation, Ginger Rogers got so steamed up over the idea of missing the preview of "Stage Door" that she and Phyllis Fraser cut two weeks off their holiday and drove back to Hollywood. They made the 2,000 miles in five days, stopping only to sleep and eat.

That comedienne, who sued her husband recently, can't be pining away, for she was at a late spot over the week-end with a well-known stage actor and enlivened the last floor show by getting out before the patrons and putting on an act.

Delay in finishing the sets made it impossible to start the new Mae West picture on schedule. The studio was planning for it to go before the camera on Monday, but that was the thirteenth, and the superstitious star vetoed the idea.

Rare in studio annals was M. G. M.'s consent for James Stewart's flight to Cleveland. The actor took off with Jimmy Mattern, arriving in Cleveland at 1:30 Labor Day. He saw the air races, boarded a transport plane that night and was on the "Navy Blue and Gold" set, ready to work, at 9 a. m. Tuesday.

The studio okay was a big compliment to Mattern, because

When Ben Bernie and Allen arrived on the same Twentieth Century-Fox set, photographers to meet them in Pasadena. Unknown to the set, Bernie had made plans to run into Los Angeles. One of the photographers, however, and Allen surrounded him, and he jumped off the train and ran into Los Angeles. He was still on when the cars started rolling, had to make a frantic dash to get back onto his Pullman.
