

Wage-Hour Bill Seen As Reviving NRA Features

The wage-hour bill provides for a new direction for the National Labor Relations Act. It is a revival of important features of the old NRA. The bill provides for a new administrator under the act, instead of the present board provided for by the act. Representatives for Public Under the plan, the new committee would have equal numbers of representatives of capital and labor, with not more than three interested representatives of the state of whom would be chair-

The administrator would hand over the committees all his data on an industry and the latter could summon witnesses to get additional information. The committees would be limited to wage-hour problems and would be authorized to develop fair practices as under NRA. They would submit their recommendations to the administrator. The latter would review them and would be authorized to take three actions: he could reject the recommendations, he could recommend them back to the committee for further study, or he could recommend them to the committee and appoint a new one. The administrator would be permitted to promulgate a new "code" without the consent of the committee.

Weigh Living Cost
The revised bill it is understood, will be guided by the following considerations in recommending a minimum wage:

Cost of living, wages paid by firms in particular industry where reasonable minimum standards are voluntarily maintained; wages paid in other sections of the industry under collective agreements; cost of moving from production points to homes; reasonable value of the services rendered; differences in unit of manufacturing occasioned by natural resources, operating conditions or other production cost factors.

Approximately 100 Democratic adherents of the wage-hour bill held a caucus headed by Representative Arthur D. Healey (D) of Massachusetts and attended by Speaker Charles B. Bandhead, Majority Leader Rayburn and majority whip Frank J. Bland this morning. The group organized itself into a "body-bloc" to protect the labor standards bill when it reaches the floor Monday after finally being dislodged from the rules committee. The bill fight weakening amendments on the floor.

Members of the measure agreed to be on the floor at all times during the week to prevent surprise amendments. Conservatives as well as Liberals were in the caucus which heard the bill and urged unity in getting the bill through the House.

Wallace Pleads for Bill Change

MANY LOOSE LICENSE

To date, 14,291 revocations have been made of state driver's licenses, according to word received here yesterday from Raleigh.

The greater part of the revocations are for driving drunk, while larceny of auto and forcible trespass are the cause of only a small per cent.

Every generation worries about its young people but few generations do anything about the matter except to criticize the youngsters.

A MESSAGE TO MOTORISTS ABOUT THE NEW GASOLINE LAW

THE State of North Carolina, under a new law which became effective December 1st, prescribes certain minimum quality standards for gasoline.

These quality requirements were set in view of the needs of today's motors. Yet several years ago, That Good Gulf Gasoline was stepped up well above these new state standards—and has continued so ever since.

Gulf's premium gasoline, No-Nox Ethyl, exceeds the new state minimum requirements by the widest margin in motoring history.

GULF OIL CORPORATION

It has been Gulf's practice in the past—and will continue to be so in the future—to set its own standards of quality, and to raise those standards as rapidly as advances in technology permit.

To this end, Gulf maintains nine modern laboratories, staffed by able scientists, whose aim is constantly to better every previous best. This is why the Sign of the Orange Disc, displayed by all Good Gulf dealers of North Carolina, is a reliable guide to fine motoring products.
