

HERE and THERE

By Hilda Way Gwyn

The longer we live the more we realize that really great people . . . those who have accomplished things of importance . . . are the simplest and easiest to talk to . . . for only in rare cases do they ever try to impress you . . . it isn't necessary . . . I was reminded of this fact when J. Dale Stentz recently brought Mildred Seydell in the office . . . on her trip here . . . when she was collecting material for her booklet . . . "Then I saw North Carolina" . . . which she is writing for the state advertising committee . . . perhaps there is a type of kinship between all newspaper people . . . whether they write in a big way for nationally known papers and magazines . . . or scribble for a country weekly . . . both are writing about and dealing with people . . . in either case . . . Mrs. Seydell told me she started her career as a society editor . . . and that she learned as much about human nature then as she had ever learned since . . . with her gracious manner it was quite easy to understand how she had "walked with kings" and "had not lost the common touch."

It is said that she has interviewed more kings and queens and celebrities than any other woman in the world . . . I have heard that her home is one of show places in Atlanta . . . it seems that she has turned her attic into a studio . . . which is a most fascinating place . . . to visit . . . she has a certain chair in which more famous people have sat in than any known in this country . . . it is called "Celebrity Chair," . . . and an invitation to occupy that chair and give an interview is about the highest compliment Mrs. Seydell can pay a person . . . I'll bet she makes

North Carolina an alluring place to the outside world . . . and no doubt will make us natives more happy to read about what a wonderful land we live in . . . in her column she edits for the Atlanta American . . . "Mildred Seydell says" . . . she has been giving a lot of space to Waynesville . . . and incidentally to some of our distinguished citizens . . . one entire column was devoted to Caroline, Clyde, Billy and Nip and Tuck Ray . . .

A QUIET DAY AT HOME . . . last Friday I was not to come to the Mountaineer office unless I was called . . . I planned a nice quiet day at home . . . for we had had a rather hectic week . . . getting out the paper . . . the painters were everywhere in our office . . . copy was produced under trying conditions . . . you would get started on a story . . . and somebody would ask you to move . . . you had to work under scaffolding . . . and if you turned your back a minute you would find your typewriter . . . anywhere but where you left it . . . then the editor was rushing to get off to the state press meeting . . . and since he was president, had to leave on time . . . so I relished a day of relaxation at home . . . After breakfast and the routine household cares were over . . . I looked down on my garden . . . nothing particular to boast about . . . but a wealth of nasturtiums . . . I thought of all the people I would like to send some to . . . so down I started . . . before I reached the garden . . . I was called on the phone . . . a news story . . . must be written . . . I started again . . . a woman to see me on some important business . . . she was selling a book that "my child had need of" . . . I was told . . . and I do not doubt the truth . . . but I was not buying books that morning . . .

I went into the garden . . . and started picking . . . was called to the house . . . a man to see me . . . no he could not send the message . . . so I dragged up the hill and two flights of steps . . . (these hillside gardens) . . . he wanted to do some printing for me . . . I tried to interrupt his sales talk . . . and tell him . . . "he was carrying coals to Newcastle" . . . that I worked in a printing office . . . but his line he would finish . . . before I could resume my picking of nasturtiums again I was called to mend a sheet bound for the laundry . . . at last back to the garden . . . another phone call . . . and so the day went . . . in the middle of the afternoon . . . my husband . . . all enthusiastic . . . arrived from the farm with eight gallons of blackberries . . . to be canned and jellied . . . when late that night I eased myself between the sheets I looked forward to Monday morning and a nice restful busy day at the office . . .

Where do the people drifting about the country come from . . . and where are they going . . . recently I have had access to a book "The Land of the Free" . . . a most impressive pictorial volume . . . with a poem by Archibald MacLeish . . . unique in that the poem did not inspire the pictures . . . but the verses followed the pictures . . . most of the photographs were taken for the Resettlement administration . . . and are very powerful in the ideas they portray . . . the waste we have made in this country . . . on such a lavish and magnificent scale . . . that now people are thrown out of homes . . . because in destroying the land and its natural resources . . . we have taken the freedom away . . . I was reminded of the book on Monday night when an unkept, dirty man stopped at my front door and begged for food . . . I understood the next day he was removed by the police from Main street dead drunk . . . but as "The Land of the Free" . . . shows in its pictures . . . "We got the road to go by when we got to go" . . . not a pleasing thought . . . but we see them all about us moving on . . . and if we stop to think it over . . . something very fine about our American life and its independence is passing . . . is being lost . . . this crowd that is traveling from community to community . . . homeless . . . without roots . . . is on the increase . . . a problem today . . . but a more serious one tomorrow . . .

80 Women Gather At Crabtree For Joint Club Meet

The Crabtree demonstration club was hostess to Fines Creek, Rock Spring and Iron Duff demonstration clubs on Friday, July 15, at the Crabtree high school.

The clubs met at Crabtree at 10 o'clock and enjoyed getting acquainted with the ladies of the different clubs. At 10 o'clock the president of the Crabtree club welcomed and invited the ladies to the lunch room where a lovely plate luncheon was served by the Crabtree ladies. The tables were beautifully decorated with cut flowers. Between courses of the dinner the Fines Creek club gave a response to the welcome by singing a very appropriate song entitled "There Are Eats That Make Us Happy." After the luncheon the club members met in the auditorium and grouped in their various club and attended to the business, then they assembled together for the afternoon activities. The following program was rendered: Reading—Where came our patriotic songs. Song—America. Reading—The meaning of Independence Day. Reading—The Loving Scientist. Song—Battle Hymn of the Republic. Reading—Wagon wheels in the Kitchen. Reading—Garden Furniture.

After the program an hour of recreation was enjoyed by all, after which the meeting adjourned. There were about 80 club members present. Each enjoyed the generous hospitality of the Crabtree club. Miss Mary Margaret Smith, home demonstration agent, is leader of these and other clubs. It is through her that the club women of this county have been able to come in contact with other club women and get helpful ideas from them as well as the many helpful suggestions that she gives us at each meeting.
