Cold Pressed Grapes Make The Best Juice

Cold-pressed grape juice has a much better flavor and quality than hot-pressed or cooked juice.

Select firm, ripe grapes for making juice. If a large quantity of juice is to be made, a grape crusher will be needed, but for smaller amounts the grapes can be mashed in a dishpan with a potato masher or a bottle.

After crushing, pour the grapes into a cheesecloth bag and strain off the juice. Allow the juice to stand in buckets for an hour to settle, then filter through a flannel jelly bag and pour at once into hot, sterilized jars.

Partially seal the jars and place them in a hot water canner. Cover the jars with water. When the water

Official Of Rotary International Here

T. W. Thornhill, district governor of the 190th Rotary district, addressed the Waynesville club and 26 visitors last Friday, urging them to enlarge the Rotary program, at home and abroad.

"Rotary has a more definite place in the world today, than ever before," the international official said. "Our progress is indicative that our fundamentals are being sought, not only by individuals but by nations as well."

He goes to boil vigorously, take the canner off the stove, remove the jars, complete the seal. Mrs. C. C. Morris, of State College, pointed out that when the water begins to boil vigorously, the temperature inside the jars will be approximately 185 degrees F. Higher temperature will impair the flavor of the juice.

The hulls left in the cheesecloth bag may be used to make grape paste stock. Cook the grape pulps slowly in a large dish pan until the seed begin to separate from the pulp. Stir constantly with a wooden spoon while cooking, as the pulp scorches easily.

Remove pan from the stove. Pour the pulp through a collander or use a potato ricer to remove the seed. Pour the hot pulp into hot, sterilized jars and process in a hot water canner for 30 minutes at boiling temperature. Remove jars from canner, complete the seal, and store until the stock is to be used for making grape paste.

Early Breeding May Injure Young Stock

Breeding young animals too soon will stunt their growth and lower the quality of their offspring, warns L. L. Case, extension animal husbandman at State College.

Heifers should not be bred until they are at least 18 months old, and sometimes it is advisable to wait until 20 or 24 months old. It is also a good idea to wait until ewe lambs are a year old before they are bred.

Case pointed out that the American Hereford Cattle Breeders Association will not register a calf dropped from a cow that is less than 25 months old, which means that the heifer must not be bred before they are 18 months old.

He also stated that July and August are the best breeding months for commercial sheep flocks in North Carolina. This brings the lambs in December and January, and they are ready for market in May when prices reach their peak.

The ewes and their lambs, he continued, can make a good living in the winter by feeding on winter cover crops of rye or other small grains along with winter legumes such as crimson clover, Austrian winter peas, and vetch.

The best breeding months for beef cattle are May, June and July, so the calves will be dropped in February and March have them time to be ready for weaning about November 1. The leading beef cattle breeders of Eastern North Carolina follow this practice.
