Eight-Ton Trees Wrapped Up And Shipped 450 Miles

Wrapping 28 eight-ton pepper trees in neat, burlapped packages, placing them on 14 flat cars—two to a car—and shipping them from Los Angeles to San Francisco's Treasure Island in one day and two nights was one of the recent orders filled by a Los Angeles tree-moving firm for the Golden Gate International Exposition. It is said that this was the first trainload of trees to be shipped in California, where big trees moving by truck has become a commonplace occurrence. The trees were about 25 feet high and had a spread of about 20 feet. The roots and earth were in boxes six feet square. They were laid down flat on the cars with the boxes at each end and the heads of the trees together in the center. Carloads of eggs are not handled more carefully than this unique shipment of live trees, which were transported under special instructions to trainmen to avoid jerking and quick coupling which might jar the earth loose from the roots. The trunks, limbs and foliage of the trees were completely inclosed with huge sheets of burlap about 40 feet square. Before the burlap was removed they resembled great pieces of machinery, which are often shipped on flat cars and covered over with canvas. Unlike inoperative machinery, it was necessary for this shipment to be conditioned for the 450-mile trip. The trees were boxed about three months prior to the time they were moved. A tile system was installed in each box for irrigation and fertilization. Each week the wide-spreading branches were pulled in a little tighter in order that the spread would not be greater than 9 1/2 feet wide and 12 feet in height to enable the trees to clear railroad tunnels and underpasses. After a barge trip across the Bay from Oakland the flat cars were placed on a siding at Treasure Island and the trees picked up by cranes and loaded on trucks to be hauled to their locations. As soon as the burlap was removed and the trees were set upright on the ground, the limbs quickly recovered their normal spreading habit. The bright green fernlike foliage was in excellent condition and many trees had their cluster of carmine-colored berries still intact. Visitors to the Exposition in 1939 will find most of these trees lining the walks in front of the Federal building. Several of them were placed in the court of exhibition buildings. The boxing and shipping of the trees was under the direction of L. V. Wadsworth of Los Angeles.
