Bishop Cannon To Conclude Lecture Series Tonight

Large Crowds Hear Dr. Wiggins, Of Macon, Tell Of A Poet's Way Of Life

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of Richmond, Va., will speak from the Lake Junaluska Assembly platform tonight for the second of two lectures this week. He spoke at 8 o'clock last night, also. His lecture theme will be "Some Battle in Which I have Participated," and a large crowd from nearby sections is expected to hear him tell at first hand of some of the stormy passages which have marked his career in his espousal of controversial measures. Dr. R. L. Wiggins, of Macon, was heard by another good crowd at the auditorium Tuesday morning in the second of his lecture series on "The Poet's Way of Life." His theme Tuesday morning took up the physical senses of the poet coupled with his imagination and inner vision. "The poet sees and hears," declared the speaker. "He has eyes like our eyes, but he opens wider his eyes and keeps keener his ears. He is more observant; more heedful. He has too a nose for every scented breeze and a delicate sense of touch. Yet he is not abnormal or mysterious, just as a profession tea taster can distinguish between a hundred different brands of tea. "The poet is a man or woman with all his senses wide awake to everything in life about him. Tennyson was near-sighted, but one has only to read his poem on 'The Eagle' to see how closely he observed and studied. It is with the inner eye, however, that the poet best of all sees what most of us poor mortals fail to see. With the inner ear, which we too have, he hears what for us often is lost. Longfellow wrote, 'Blue were her eyes as fairy flax and her cheeks like dawn of day.' "The poet looks at the little flower until he sees just what every observer sees; then he looks with his soul until he sees what no man has ever seen before. Not only does he see with illumination, but in the static of our daily lives he intently looks and listens until imagination transforms the commonplace and heavenly beauty appears. "Doubtless the description made by the scientist is more accurate, but the poet sees with the soul, and what Ruskin chose to call 'pathetic fallacy,' we might understand in some cases as divine revelation."

Bishop Ainsworth Suggests That Hull And Roosevelt Exchange Places; Says Change Would Tend To Bring Peace

Opposed to a third term, but favorable to some of Roosevelt's policies, Bishop W. N. Ainsworth, of Macon, Ga., sees in Cordell Hull for President and Franklin D. Roosevelt of Secretary of State, a tie-up that in his opinion would tend to make peace and give as effective an administration as this country could possibly have. Bishop Ainsworth, keen analysis and appraiser of the world scene, is spending the summer at Lake Junaluska, following a custom of many years. He is one of the bishops of the Methodist church and while under the age for automatic retirement, retired from active work two years ago on account of a severe illness. He takes an active interest in everything that concerns religious and national life. Seen on the porch of his summer home here, the bishop countered a possible objection to his choice that the President would not be willing to step down, by saying that every man should serve where he can best, and if President Roosevelt can serve best by taking a secondary place he believed the President would be willing to do it, and in doing so he would command public respect. "Every American citizen," declared the bishop, must be profoundly concerned about how the Ship of State is manned during these days of world upheaval. Thousands of people with deep appreciation of what Mr. Roosevelt has done are intensely opposed to a third term for any man in this republic. "I propose the Honorable Cordell Hull for president, with an agreement that Mr. Roosevelt will be appointed Secretary of State until the war is over. "America would be in safe hands. Every man should be willing to serve where he can do it best and promote harmony."

YOU'RE TELLING ME!

By WILLIAM RITT Central Press Writer THE ITALIANS continue to imitate their pals, the Germans. We've just read where the Italians have scuttled a couple of their ships. Americans in Germany are just now receiving Christmas cards mailed last year. The Santa Claus depicted on them must look surprised. Domestic news is just as fantastic as that from Europe. The St. Louis Browns take both ends of a double-header from the Yankees. Women's shoe styles to become quite fanciful. They'll have to go some to beat Cinderella's glass slipper.
