- Blackie Bear -

By D. SAM COX

OH YES, THEY WILL GET BLACKIE "TOMORROW" Story 52

You have seen lots of folks that were always going to do something "tomorrow." And you have also had your mother or your daddy or your teacher tell you that "tomorrow" never comes. Always it is "today."

But "today," the nearest Mr. Man and the other hunters came to getting Blackie Bear was to hear some more about some tracks that "somebody" had seen "somewhere" that looked like bear tracks. And Blackie Bear was just like "tomorrow," he didn't show up.

Day after day they hunted for Blackie, and day after day they all came back home with some sort of an excuse for not bringing his hide or a quarter of his meat, until Mr. Man's wife and Aunt Judy and all the other wives were getting out of patience over so many failures.

And then one night Uncle Joe saw Blackie Bear—at least he thinks he did.

When the crowd came home from the bear hunt this night, it was about dark, and they all stopped at Mr. Man's house for a drink of water, and then all went home from there. You know Rover Dog lived with Mr. Man, and Rover's puppy had stayed over at Uncle Joe's house ever since Howler left. I think the puppy was either tired or just homesick and wanted to stay all night with his daddy. Anyway he did stay, and Uncle Joe, thinking that he had gone ahead, didn't miss him until he got home. Then he was so tired he told Aunt Judy he just couldn't go back for the dog, and, besides, he knew that Blackie was miles and miles down the creek, where "somebody" saw his tracks that day, and where they would find and kill him "tomorrow." So he and Aunt Judy went on to sleep without worrying about the dog.

I told you the other day about the calf that knocked the bucket off the barrel and let Billie Possum out. This calf's name was "Bully," and he was as black as Blackie Bear, and mighty little bigger. Uncle Joe let Bully stay in his yard every night, but he always slept right near the barn where his mother had her bed just the other side of the fence.

But it seems that on this night Bully calf was restless and couldn't sleep well, or he was hungry, or something. Maybe he was just looking for some fun, as you know calves will, for few animals are more playful than a calf. Anyway, along in the middle of the night Bully was prowling around back of the kitchen, and he came across a bucket of apples that Aunt Judy had left on the step. Whether he wanted a late supper or an early breakfast nobody ever knew, but he started in eating those apples. He must have tried to swallow one without chewing it up much, for he got choked. He coughed a time or two and got the apple up out of his throat, and he was either so glad or so mad that he gave one of those croaking sorts of noises that you have heard calves make when they are playing, and the noise is almost exactly like the roar that a circus bear makes when the man punches him with a sharp stick to make him do something. It sounded like "Uh-ur-r-r-r."

The first cough that Bully gave disturbed Uncle Joe, and the "Uh-ur-r-r-r" woke him good and he was sure it was Blackie. He jumped out of bed, grabbed his gun and crept out of the front door and around toward the back of the house. It was mighty dark and he was moving carefully, for he didn't want Blackie to see him first. He moved around the corner and there stood Blackie Bear right at the kitchen steps. At least Uncle Joe thought it was Blackie, but he was so scared at seeing a great big bear right there at him that he was just about paralyzed, and he just couldn't raise his gun to shoot.

By that time Bully saw Uncle

Joe, and I reckon he wanted to play a joke on him. Anyway he turned loose another one of those "Uh-ur-r-r-r" noises that scared Uncle Joe's paralysis clear out of him, and he turned around to run back into the house. Just then Bully jumped at Uncle Joe and butted him right into a big fig bush that was near the house.

Uncle Joe made about as much noise as Bull Calf had made, and Bully bellowed once more, kicked up his heels and ran away toward the barn, while Uncle Joe picked himself out of the fig tree and ran back in his house and slammed the door to keep Blackie Bear out.
