

Throng Atop Newfound Gap For Dedication

On Monday, 15,171 people entered the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, and a vast majority stayed for the formal dedication by President Roosevelt late in the afternoon. This photograph was made from above the speaker's stand. The large flag in the center is on the North Carolina-Tennessee state line. Shortly after this picture was made, the announcement was made that the President and his party were approaching the Park, and the crowd milled forward to fill every available inch of space. This photo made for The Mountaineer by John Topping.

to the people of a free nation.
"I hope it will not belong to them in theory alone and that in practice the ownership of this park will not be in the hands of some strange kind of government puppet subject to an overseas overlord."
"I hope the use of it will not be confined to people coming hither on government specified days and on government directed tours. I hope the trees will not be slaughtered by the axe in order that a government may conduct wars of aggression against other nations."
"I hope that roads and paths and trails will still be built in the cause of liberty and recreation, and not confined to the ulterior purposes of a war machine controlled by an individual or an oligarchy."
Interest in the dedication of this great preserve so long hoped for by the citizens of the two states was such that hundreds arrived late Sunday night and parked on Clingman's Dome to be ready for the festivities which were set for 4:30 the following day. Reserved seats had been provided for around 1,000 invited guests, but those who did not have space "inside the ropes" willingly stood the entire time of the dedicatory ceremonies.
Hundreds of representatives from the two state's patrols directed the traffic and at no time was there any confusion. Detailed plans had been made as to all parking arrangements and the handling of the crowds expected.

North Carolina and Governor Cooper, of Tennessee, Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt, Governor Maybank, of South Carolina, Governor Keen Johnson, of Kentucky, and numerous others.
Secretary Ickes introduced Governor Hoey, who made an eloquent plea to the citizens of the country for national defense, by declaring that we have temporized too long "with subversive groups and ought to 'outlaw' the Communist party, Nazi bund, and every other disloyal organization."
Governor Prentice Cooper also spoke, but confined his remarks to information about the wonders of the park.
Mr. Ickes also introduced the President, who was given a great ovation as he rose to address the crowd, standing directly above the impressive seal of the Department of the Interior.
Music was furnished by the Knoxville high school band and Kings Mountain school band, both playing a number of patriotic airs.
As the shadows of dusk fell over the valleys the crowds under the direction of the patrolmen began to move. The cars went out in the same order in which they had been placed. Long into the night they drove down on either side of the Gap, after a history making event in North Carolina and Tennessee.

The crowd followed the parade to the stadium, where a number of athletic stunts and contests, with selections and drills by the uniformed band filling the greater part of the day.
At noon 85 members of the band were guests at a fried chicken dinner served in the school cafeteria.
