Price Chief Warns of Harsh Sacrifices In The Future

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.—The American public was warned by Federal Price Administrator Leon Henderson to brace itself for tomorrow of industrial dislocation and harsh sacrifice.

"It is a dark picture I paint," Henderson told 1,200 attending the New York Housewares' Manufacturing association convention as he predicted an end shortly of the recent boom in sales of automobiles, refrigerators, vacuum cleaners, radios, electric stoves, furniture and other hard goods.

"It becomes my disagreeable duty," said Henderson, "to tell you that the party is over. . . Before long now there will be more purchasing power running around hunting something to buy than there are goods available. . ."

"I wish I could tell you that we had an easy solution, that everything is going to be all right. I can't promise you any such hope. All I can tell you is that only by sweating blood and tears can the dislocations be held to a minimum.

"No exactly similar paradox ever confronted American business. Customers eager and able to buy will be crowding the market places and stores, but manufacturers will be unable to get enough raw materials to satisfy demands.

"Thus, it is a dark picture I paint. It is a picture of factories made idle by lack of materials to work with, or single industry towns blighted by spurious prosperity based on production of goods which we can't wear, or eat, or live in."

Henderson asserted no power on earth could prevent inflation unless the government succeeded in controlling prices, purchasing power and installment buying. He said it must stiffen control of prices, "no

A large number have been from boys and girls over the state and many have contained contributions to the fund. These letters, pencilled on every conceivable kind of paper, have shown me that our boys and girls have a splendid spirit of sympathy and a genuine willingness to make personal sacrifices for the benefit of others."

The ship is designed to give first aid to both the civilian bombed areas and also to the army and navy casualties. A plane bought by the employees of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. A duplicate of which the state will buy was recently flown to all airports in North Carolina, with Mr. Pou and other officials as passengers.

from jobbers selling to the government.

Better equipment and improved methods of handling and preparing produce will give more rapid and efficient results this year.

The blackberries are now being picked directly from the vines into quart baskets instead of the old method of dumping into gallon containers, thereby being handled only one time. Hence they remain firm and unbruised for canning.

An improvement in the preparation of beans will be noted in a new machine that does expert snipping. With two men and five women this machine can do the work of 100 women. The method of sorting the beans according to the size has also been greatly improved.

Out of the twenty women now working at the plant only three girls are new on the job, the others having been employed each summer since the first year of operation.

Frank M. Davis is general manager of the plant and William Peek is in charge of the canning operations.

The official said prices were going up—"it's only a question of time lag when they will hit the pocket-book"—and that taxes would later rise to act as a further brake on purchasing power to prevent inflation.

"If we are in earnest about this matter—and I believe deep down we all are—then the American way would be to outproduce Hitler," said Henderson. "We can do this if we spend three hours out of every eight-hour working day for defense."

Roosevelt Urges State To Use Daylight Time

Washington. — An urgent request for the immediate establishment of daylight saving time in North Carolina was dispatched to Governor J. Melville Broughton Tuesday by President Roosevelt.

Immediate action by North Carolina and seven other Southern states was urged by the chief executive as he sent a special enactment of legislation giving him authority to establish year-round and nationwide daylight saving time.

Citing potential annual savings of 104,500,000 kilowatt hours of electric energy in these eight southeastern states, the President appealed to the governors of North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, Mississippi and Florida to proclaim daylight saving time schedules if legally possible.

In his message to Congress, President Roosevelt asserted that electric power is "the prime energy of our national defense effort!"

and stressed that it is essential that it be conserved in all possible ways. Daylight saving time, he added, is a practical method for such conservation.

The letter to Governor Broughton further stressed that "the country is faced with a serious power shortage that is impeding the national defense program. This in the southeastern portion of the shortage now is particularly acute country. Every effort is being made to meet rapidly increasing power requirements."

Although Governor Broughton has opposed the exportation of North Carolina's electric energy to industrial enterprises in other states, the President expressed the hope that "emergency transmission connections shortly will make it possible to deliver any excess power from one region to another."

Doorbell ringing-- easy style

There's nothing mysterious about the way advertising works.

It's like the salesmen who go from house to house looking for customers.

Advertising does the same job on a larger scale. It's quicker—reaches more people—at a lower cost per call.

In other words, it's a time saver, which means it's a money saver as well.
