Question: How many lights are needed in the poultry house to "exceed the day" and increase winter egg production? Answer-The rule, says the ex-

Two 40-watt lamps will do the job. The extension poultrymen suggest that the lamps be placed high enough so that people can walk under them easily. The evenly over the house. Poultry

Grain should be looked upon as a supplement to roughage. If the cows receive all the good quality roughage they will consume without waste, a Jer-new and relocated war industries, and establishment of large military encampments, have caused excessive demands for hospital service in some communities, and there is increasing danger of lowered standards in the effort to care for more patients than the depleted staffs can properly serve. In this emergency most communities are rallying to the support of the hospitals, furnishing volunteer nurses' aides and other voluntary workrs, encouraging study and practice of home nursing, discourageing hospitalization for minor illnesses, interesting young people in careers in medicine and nursing, and increasing disease and accident prevention efforts. By voluntarily granting hospitalization priorities to the more seriously ill, the people will conserve hospital resources as they are conserving other services and many commodities through allocaton according to needs.

The requirements for approval are fundamental to good hospital care, as may be seen by the following summary of the principles: (1) Modern, well operated phy-
