Cpl. J. T. Rich Goes On Ration Test

Cpl. J. T. Rich, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jones C. Rich of Maggie, has recently returned to Camp Carson after participating in an experiment conducted by the Quartermaster Corps, medical department, and ground forces to determine how soldiers fare on an exclusive diet of emergency rations.

Six companies from the 201st Infantry Regiment, to which Cpl. Rich is attached, commanded by Col. James H. O'Reilly, have been in the Pike National Forest for eight weeks undergoing the test. One of the companies, a "control unit" lived on field rations. The others ate assorted emergency rations for various periods to see how they compare physically with those of the control unit.

The war department needed some idea of how men would get along on field rations for extended periods in view of conditions arising in the war where men may have to spend weeks in forward or isolated positions beyond the lines of normal supply.

All men were in excellent physical condition when they started the experiment and finished the test in even better health.

A ramshackle jalopy pulled into a used-car lot with a mighty rattle and an ear-splitting grinding of brakes, and the driver asked to be shown some second-hand cars.

Salesman: "Tired of the old bus, I suppose?"
 Driver: "No, it isn't that, I really have a fondness for all its squeaks and rattles, but every time I park the car, a policeman dashes up to make sure the accident has been reported."

Haywood, the Coming Cattle Capital of the State

The third annual Hereford Sale here, with some of the best breeders in the South participating; together with the convention of the North Carolina Hereford Breeders Association here next week, brings us nearer the realization of our ambition of many years to become known as the Cattle Capital of the State.

We are proud of the part we have played, and our ability to carry a big share of this program. This institution is always for progress, when it is on a sound and safe basis.
