

Community Cannery Patronized By Both Local People and Visitors

The Community Cannery officially closed for the vegetable season last week. During the eight-week period of operation there were 20,000 cans of fruits, vegetables and meats processed which included four beeves and two hogs.

Approximately 150 families used the facilities and 226 people were given organized, systematic instructions in canning. Those who were enrolled in the organized class held in practical conservation of food were given 3,536 hours of instruction. This does not include preliminary instructions given to groups before the cannery was opened.

The products canned in the local unit are distributed not only through Haywood county, but around the world, since cookies and candies sealed at the cannery went to the South Pacific, England, Italy and foreign points almost unknown locally. The latter were not considered in the count of preserved foods.

In addition to the families canning a corps of workers canned thousands of cans of fruits and vegetables for the school lunch-rooms in this district and the Bethel school district.

There are a number of people who will wish to use the cannery for processing meats and apples, later, according to J. C. Brown, manager of the program. In such cases it will be necessary for those who wish to can to file their applications at an early date, not necessarily the exact date on which canning would be done, but the intention to can and the approximate head of animals or bushels of apples to be canned. Without this information in hand those in charge of the work do not plan to open the cannery during the winter.

Anyone wishing to use the cannery should make application for the facilities with J. C. Brown, local supervisor War Food Production Training.

The season just closed has shown the need for those canning to have preliminary instructions on preparation of the products and at least one demonstration in the use of equipment before actually canning, it was learned from Mr. Brown. If there is sufficient demand for this type of training a period of instruction will be organized in each community.

Among those assisting Mr. Brown in the operation of the cannery were: Mrs. Rufus Siler, Haywood County school lunchroom supervisor, and Mrs. Herbert L. Buchanan, Jr., Home Economics teacher in the Waynesville Township high school.
