SNAP SHOTS

By Frances Gilbert Frazier Staff Writer

On the escutcheon of every American should be chiseled these words: "KEEP GOING." How easy it is for one to lag behind when the road ahead looks rugged and uninviting! How many excuses can be found to turn off into that path boarded with the flowers of ease and how many wasted moments can be shoved into eternity by studding along the road to indecision!

None of us likes to do the unpleasant and we find a way we will eventually have to come to the task, and it will be none the less painful after the delay. We all do it: there are no exceptions.

To all of us come those days when we have to decide some vital subject; days when the world revolves in a mist of doubt, anxiety, and perplexity. The sun seems utterly obscured and no ray of enlightenment shines in our direction. We are completely exhausted with our struggle against odds that seem overwhelming. Yet, after we have made our resolution and we look back, we are disgusted with ourselves for the whole thing now looks so trivial. Those hours spent in trying to force ourselves to "keep going" on to that decision have all been thrown away. We have used up energy that could have been put to some good use.

When you are up against a proposition that you, and you alone, can solve grab it by the horns of the dilemma and wrestle it into submission before you let go. You have conquered not only the matter in hand but yourself, for each time you let the subject rise on its feet to attack you there is still that tussle ahead for it has to be thrown, sooner or later, if you are to be master of yourself.

Haven't you reveled in that glorious feeling of exultant relief when something obnoxious is behind you where you cannot see it, and you know that it has been moved out of your future destiny by your own accomplishment? You have such a smug complacency as you gaze about you on those unfortunates who have put off until tomorrow work that is piling up by the minutes until tomorrow it will look unsurmountable.

"Keep going" whether it is accomplishing outward missions or accepting the perplexities of life as it opens up each morning. "Keep going" whether you are on the lowest rung of the ladder or half way up. When you reach the top, you'll find that you have done so because you kept going. No one ever reached a goal by stopping and when things are the darkest, then is the time that you must "keep going." It never gets day light until night is over and the world never stops to postpone its revolutions. We would all be in somewhat of a mess, wouldn't we, if Old Father Time said: "I believe I'll not make my round today, I've kept this up millions of eons and so what?" Yes, SO WHAT? Forward march! KEEP GOING!
