

Greater Understanding And Cooperation Would Solve Problems, Bowles

Waynesville Educator Points Out Needs For Greater Understanding Among Nations

"The world is not prepared to meet the problems created by this new age," said M. H. Bowles, superintendent of the Waynesville district schools before the Rotary Club here last Friday, in a discussion of "Education in This Atomic Age."

"Historians will have to decide whether this period we are now living in is the beginning of the atomic age, or the era of a struggle between capital and labor," the speaker continued, as he pointed out the only successful solution to the question is a complete understanding and willingness to cooperate with all peoples of the world.

Mr. Bowles traced civilization from the stone age to the present time, pointing out that man's first concern was protection of self and family against wild animals, and how the crude hand-axe was his only weapon. Later man discovered the wheel, and used it to help him perform manual tasks, and centuries later water power, wind, and then steam was utilized to help lighten the load. The traditional trades were handed down from generation to generation, and each community was self-sustaining, but with the arrival of steam and water power, the great industrial revolution of 1750 to 1830 took place.

"The same is as true today, as back in the era of the industrial revolution—we are not ready to cope with the problems of this atomic age," he repeated.

"All education must stress cooperation. Our best illustration of cooperation today is the success of the atomic bomb. It required thousands of men and women working together, great scientists, and even nations pooling resources of science to achieve this."

"Education must be concerned with the thousands as well as the few. The atomic energy was found by super men, and we must find youth of super intelligence in order to keep abreast, and move forward into this era that we are now entering."

"There is now before Congress a bill authorizing the expenditures of 80 millions for higher education that will enable students to be chosen for vocations they are best fitted, similar to the plan in use in Holland today."

Mr. Bowles emphasized the fact that "America needs a sound government policy under which capital and labor can work together, and have a thorough understanding. No one anticipated the drastic changes that have been brought about in the social world of which labor unions are a part."

"From here on, education must

Lions To Sponsor Oratorical Contest At Meet

Under the sponsorship of the Publicity Committee the Lions Club will be honored tonight with five high school boys who participated in the D.A.R. oratorical contest at the high school a few days ago. These boys will deliver their speeches on a competitive basis. Judges will determine the winner, second and third places. A small award is to be presented by individual members of the Lions Club. Lion Ralph Fore will have charge of the program.

Last week the East Waynesville school chorus sang for the Lions. Under the capable direction of Miss Moore, music teacher of the three elementary schools, the chorus from each school has been the guests of the club in recent months.

The attendance contest is well under way with the team of Tony Davis leading. Each member of the club is urged to attend every meeting during this special contest. Club meets at the Maples every Thursday night at 7:00 o'clock.

teach the facts about great powers, their peoples, and not resort to propaganda, but teach the whole facts, so that the students can have a thorough understanding of the peoples of the world, and not a distorted reactionary opinion."

"Science must be taught in high schools in order to find budding scientists, and prepare them for the rapid changes of this atomic age."

"The greatest need of the era, however, is the prevention of war, and that means a need for thoroughly trained diplomats as well as scientists."

The whole program boils down to one of understanding and cooperation, and the problem confronting us today is getting the people of the world to want to cooperate and understand each other. All mediums of information will be needed—the schools, churches, newspapers, radio, magazines, the screen, and civic clubs."

In closing Mr. Bowles said, "we must drive hard, and drive fast to the day when no nation on earth can declare war. This program can be attained by basing our studies, our understanding, and cooperations on facts, and not propaganda."

Men Sought For Marine Corps Aviation Duty

Men are being accepted for Marine Corps aviation duty and will receive special consideration at this particular time in regard to training with this branch of the service, according to S/Sgt. Sam Head, of the district headquarters recruiting station, Asheville.

This is the first time, said Sgt. Head that such a program for enlistees has been offered by the Marine Corps. Piloting, bombardier flight duty, aviation engineer, radio gunner, and navigator are among the courses offered through this program.

Periods of enlistment vary from two, three, or four years, and men 18 or over must have registration reclassification cards with them when they enlist, while those between 17 and 18 must have parents' consent.

Men who have already registered with their draft board are eligible for enlistment, up unto the time they have actually been inducted into the armed forces. Men who do not prefer aviation duty, may enlist for regular service with the Marine Corps, and service in occupation forces in China, Japan, or over 65 different Pacific Islands.

For further information anyone wishing to enlist may contact the Marine recruiting station, county courthouse, Asheville.
