HUMAN SIDE OF LIFE

—By—
FRANCES GILBERT FRAZIER

Hello there, folks: Well, it's mighty nice meeting all you good people and as I am a stranger in these parts, I feel that you are going to accord me a warm welcome. I just blew in this morning and thus far I've found the same difficulty as all your other visitors... that of finding a place to stay. Of course, if I were only going to be here a short time it wouldn't be so bad but my intentions are to remain with all of you until frost hits this neck of the woods.

This is my first visit to these beautiful mountains but all my life I've been hearing things about them. You see, our family is of a very definite prolific strain and my relatives are legion. Many of them have spent a part of the summer here but their opinion of your hospitality wasn't so hot. They said they had never been very cordially received and in almost every instance had been brushed aside most unceremoniously. But we are a most persistent sort of personality. We never get discouraged and always try, try again.

One of our family traits is inquisitiveness. Perhaps that is why we are never welcomed in the best homes. We not only carry tales but other things that most people dislike most heartily. But we go serenely along. If you folk would copy our utter disregard for what people say about us, you might find more happiness in the world. When summer savory is especially good in spring omelets, or scrambled eggs. Chopped dill leaves and celery tips also may be used in the mixture. The herbs may be added directly to the eggs, or, for a more pronounced flavor, allowed to soak a short time in the milk which is added to the eggs.

For mackerel aux fines herbes, mix a fourth cup of fat with minced sprigs of parsley, fennel, mint and thyme and salt, pepper, cinnamon and nutmeg. Spread the seasoned fat over the fish, which has been split down the back. Then broil or fry. After removing the cooked fish to the platter, add two tablespoonfuls of orange juice to the drippings in the pan and pour over the fish before serving. Fresh succulent leaves of dill in sour cream give a delicious flavor to mackerel or other fish.

an angry word is hissed in our direction, we quickly fly from its influence and we are most agile in moving to some other quarter when a missile is aimed in our direction. Oh, yes, I am afraid people are that hostile towards us!

It is a curious thing that all our lives we are battling against the heaviest odds. We have never yet had any one say a kindly word in our favor. So you can well imagine with what fear and trepidation I am embarking upon my summer season with all of you people up here.

We are a hunted race; a despised family and a pursued clan. But we hold no animosity. Our lives are short and we make them as merry as possible under the existing circumstances. You can well imagine how hard a life we lead when we find ourselves having to move almost constantly, never allowed to stay in one place hardly long enough to settle down comfortably. But we sing along in our peculiar manner of expressing ourselves despite the epithets flung at us throughout the day. Our only hours of relief from pursuit are after the long shadows fall at night time and the world settles down to the peace it has earned after a long day of toil. We sometimes, hoping to find charity in the soft twilight, sally forth in search of adventure but it is usually too dangerous a pastime, for night time seems to be our doom. Perhaps we are not as alert, or something, but death usually finds us and only a few can survive the bivouac.

It is with deepest sorrow that I find so many of you bulwarked against any invasion of our family. Hospitality seems to have been omitted from the dictionary of your city, and the red carpet of welcome most assuredly has been well packed away in moth balls for there is absolutely no sign of it from where I am sitting. You hold out the glad hand of cordiality to all others but to us that hand holds a deadly swatter. Who am I? Why, I am A. Fly.
