Timely, Practical Household Suggestions

BY RUTH CURRENT N. S. State College

The new 80 per cent extraction flour should offer no problem in home baking, the food specialists tell us. The cook who has been making good biscuits with the flour which has been on the market can continue to use the same recipes and methods with the new flour. To the housewife starting out with her first batch of the new flour, the specialists suggest: 1) Follow your own recipe as usual, unless the manufacturer gives specific directions on the package for his particular flour; 2) If the dough or batter seems a little soft with the familiar recipe, try using a little less liquid and a bit more flour in the mixture. These are minor adjustments that some of the new flour may need, if the products do not quite come up to your family's standards.

One good way to space and share wheat is to use more potatoes and less bread for the energy food in family meals. Potatoes are now plentiful and at present prices are an inexpensive energy food. Penny for penny, potatoes offer more fuel value than any other vegetable.

Potatoes are no more "fattening" than bread. One medium-sized potato and one thick slice of bread or two thin slices, both have about 100 calories. It is the gravy, butter or other fat used on potatoes that pile up calories—and put on pounds.

Potatoes fit into any meal—breakfast, dinner, or supper. For breakfast, a favorite potato dish is potato pancakes. To make enough pancakes for a family of 5 or 6, grate 2 cups of raw potatoes and put immediately into 1/4 cup of milk. Add 1 egg, beaten slightly, 2 tablespoons flour, 1 teaspoon salt, and if desired, 1 tablespoon finely chopped onion. Drop from a tablespoon onto a greased pan. Cook until well browned and crisp on both sides. Serve hot.
