life of Peter is an indication of what may take place in the lives of all Christians. Just a few weeks before Peter was a moral coward, slinking into the darkness when accused of having acquaintance with Christ. A few hours after Pentecost he stands before thousands and proclaims the resurrection with unreserved boldness.

"Pentecost for today means a new affirmative manifesto in the proclamation of the good news."

The Rev. Dr. W. K. Greene speaking on the theme, "The Stewardship of Life," said, in part: "Few questions are more important in the life of an individual than the question of where he lives. Where a person lives is not a matter of geography. You can't find where a person lives by looking in the city directory. It is not a question of the outside but of the inside."

"We exist in the physical, social, economic, intellectual and spiritual universe, but we live in the world of our own creation. Our world consists of what we appropriate in our lives from the big universe about us, plus our own fancies and illusions. We really live in the world of dominant interests in which we are rooted and domiciled."

"Does the world in which we live include the knowledge and practice of Christian Stewardship? By Christian Stewardship we mean a spiritual awareness of some one to whom we are related as stewards and a spiritual awareness of what we hold in trust as stewards. Christian Stewardship means that all we are, all we know, all we have and all we can do is a trust from Almighty God to be used for our highest good, for the blessing of our fellowmen, for the glory of God and for the advancement of His Kingdom."

"There are many ways in which we exemplify this noble conception of Christian Stewardship. We exemplify it by our use of time, talent and treasure. We can be perfectly integrated beings in a spiritual universe only by having the certitude that we are working in partnership with God."

Armor Plated G. I. Clothing in Future

WASHINGTON—The G. I. of the future may go to war wrapped up in nylon and aluminum armor.

Army ordnance experts say they are working on such a suit for foot soldiers. A similar armor, made of thin sheets of aluminum padded in nylon, is credited with cutting air force deaths in half in the last months of World War II.

The light-weight armor will not stop a bullet, but it will bounce off shell fragments, the cause of great battle casualties, anyway.

An experienced wife is one who realizes that the world will survive even if her husband doesn't tell a story correctly.

But tolerance is not a virtue if you don't believe in it but tolerate something dreadful as a matter of "duty."

Law-enforcement officers in this state found obvious defects in 11,890 of the 35,687 motor vehicles checked during the first 11 days of the current police traffic safety check, which is being sponsored nationally by the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

A report released recently by Samuel L. Gaxner, assistant director of the State Highway Safety Division, shows that of the 11,890 vehicles having defects, 2,445 had inadequate brakes; 1,514 had horns that did not operate; 4,616 had rear lights that had burned out; 1,652 had defective windshield wipers; 1,360 had unsafe tires; and 3,917 had headlights that had burned out.

The safety check program, which began May 15th, will continue through June 30th.
