Army Air Forces Plan Artic Visit

WASHINGTON—June 17 The Army Air Forces are considering an expedition over the North Polar Regions.

It is expected, says the official publication Air Force, that war-developed Loran radio directional equipment will be used. Loran was used in "Operation Musk Ox," Army land expedition into the Canadian far north.

Underscoring its interest in the arctic short route between Europe and America, the Air Forces already have sent three converted B-29 weather planes to the region of the magnetic pole this year.

CHILD, 2, RIDES TRUCK BUMPER

LAWRENCE, L. I.—Seeing a truck pass with a small child riding on the front bumper, Patrolman Clarence Fossett commandeered a private car, gave chase but was unable to catch the truck for some miles. When he finally told the driver of the truck, Andrew Van Wick, to pull over, Mr. Van Wick was horrified, too. Sitting on the bumper, unknown to him, was his own son, Andrew, Jr., 2 years old. The hood of the truck had obscured the man's vision of the child.

Centers Planned For Vets Unable To Enter College

An announcement is expected soon that will be of interest to veterans unable to enter college this fall because of over-crowded conditions at the institutions.

Although final details are yet to be worked out, a plan drawn by the State Board of Education to set up University Centers in cities over North Carolina to offer veterans freshman year courses is meeting with general approval among the different colleges and agencies that will furnish the staff, equipment and finances to get it under way.

Veterans with college-entrance credits who wish to continue their education but have been unable to find an institution to take them, will be asked to register at the nearest high school at an early date so the proposed centers may be set up to meet a specific demand. It is estimated that 41,000 former servicemen would be eligible for this registration.

Astronomical Clock Is Displayed At Gallery

With alarm clocks as scarce as they are, there's a little gadget at the Waynesville Art Gallery which you can purchase that will keep you on your daily schedule. It is an Astronomical Clock, standing eight feet high, with enough dials to tell you the time of day at any place on the globe, as well as what the sun and moon ought to be doing at any time you are interested in finding out.

It is being offered for sale at $25,000, and so far has attracted more curiosity than bids. It is called, among other things, one of the three most important pieces made by Tiffany and Company for their exhibit at the World's Columbian Exhibition. Five and six watchmakers of the New York firm spent more than a year in its construction, and when finished placed it in a case of South American amaranth wood, richly carved in the Louis XV style, with its 25 silver and enamelled dials glistening through.

On the upper dial the sun and moon are shown in their apparent position, with the sky in the background. Below them, in the line of the horizon, is a representation of the sea, indicating the changes in the tide.

Two other dials follow. On the right is a perpetual calendar showing the signs of the zodiac, the month, date of month, day of week, leap year, Anno Domini. To the left is a dial divided into 24 parts and degrees from Greenwich. There are also 31 of the principal cities of the world marked on this dial, and a revolving plate indicates the hour of day or night at each place.

Above these two small dials show the year of Independence and the Julian period. On the lower half of the main dial are five smaller ones. They indicate, respectively: the equation of time or difference in the sun and mean time; the chronological cycles, one having the Golden Number and the Epact, and the other the Cominical letters and the sun cycles. The remaining dial shows local time, Washington time, Greenwich time, the declination by degrees north and south of the sun, and the declination of the moon.

On the Khyber Pass, India, signposts are made in pictures, since most of the travelers cannot read. Automobiles are routed one way and camels and horses another.
