he registers here or elsewhere, under an accredited school," he states.

Arrangements have already been completed with the local high school, reports Mr. Williams, for veterans to receive all pre-college schooling they need. This training will not necessarily be based on their school records, he adds, but they will be given tests and be placed in the highest grade for which they qualify. This "refresher" course will be given under Western Carolina Teachers College.

The courses, college and pre-college, will begin at 3 p. m., thus allowing a student to continue working while attending school. Several thousand Tar Heel veterans, as well as many non-veterans, have been unable to enter an acceptable college because of the large numbers who registered and inadequate housing for them all. This new plan has been designed by a steering committee at Chapel Hill under the sponsorship of the state department of public institutions, with the cooperation of the Veterans Administration, to provide the needed educational opportunities to the many young people who have been "crowded out" of the regular institutions.

Tentative plans are to have late afternoon and evening classes in high school buildings at various cities, Asheville being the nearest to Haywood county of those now considered. From three to five courses will be offered, each class lasting one hour for a five-day week. Credits will be transferable to regular colleges.

The "on-campus" courses will be for special groups at 10 different institutions including Duke and Davidson, with late afternoon and evening instruction being conducted on the campus.

The campus centers start when that college begins its regular term. The "off-campus" centers are expected to begin operating the week of Sept. 23. All applications must be in to the county superintendent by July 23, and will be available during the registration days.

Cities tentatively selected for the placing of "off-campus" classes are: Asheville, Burlington, Charlotte, Durham, Gastonia, Goldsboro, Greensboro, Lumberton, Mt. Airy, Raleigh, Rocky Mount, Wilmington and Winston-Salem.

Institutions offering "on-campus" centers are: Davidson, Duke, Catawba, Guilford, Lenior-Rhyne, Presbyterian Jr. College, Gardner-Webb Jr. College, Atlantic Christian College, and Edwards Military Institution. There also are several negro institutions and cities where colored students may obtain freshman year instruction.

Lightning Bolt Barely Misses Couple In Bed

The Henson Cove community near Canton was the scene of a near miss by a bolt of lightning July 14 during one of the recent electrical storms.

According to reports, the lightning came into the side of the bedroom at the home where Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Neal were sleeping, bounced under the bed—tearing off part of the pair of shoes, and demolishing a guitar that stood in the corner—then tore open an exit in the far wall and ploughed into the garden.

Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Neal, nor their daughter, Nellie, who also was in the house, were injured beyond the shock from their unwelcome visitor.
