W. N. C. Fair Will Feature Singing Convention In Oct.

An old-time singing convention will be the opening entertainment event of the third annual Western North Carolina fair, which will be held at the fairgrounds in Hendersonville here during the week of October 7-12, Secretary-Manager H. B. Kelly announced today.

The convention will be held on the large platform in front of the 3,000-seat, covered grandstand at 8 p. m. Monday and will feature music by both professional and amateur singers of this section.

The amateur contest, open to all singing groups in Western North Carolina, will have cash prizes of $25 for the best quartet, $15 for the best trio, and $10 for the best duet. Musical groups desiring to enter the contests are requested to mail applications to W. R. Hill at fair headquarters in the Skyland hotel.

In addition to the amateur contests, the committee has scheduled the Swanee River Boys of radio fame and the Friendly Five, an Asheville quartet and other professional singers will be on the program. None of the professional organizations will compete for the cash prizes.

The committee in charge of the event is composed of James Gilman of Hendersonville, W. L. Harmon of Rosman and J. Welman Ginnell of Asheville. W. R. Hill of Hendersonville will be master of ceremonies.

Four nights of square dance contests with the crowning of the championship team, three afternoons of automobile racing, an afternoon of horse and mule racing, and a full week of midway entertainment by the Johnny J. Denton shows are other entertainment highlights.

Vinson Howell has gone to Miami for an extended visit.

Roy Howell of Asheville, visited home folks last Sunday.

Prevent Accidents Beforehand

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph.D.

ONE reason many young children get scolded and punished so much is because the mother usually waits till she gets good and mad before she tries to make her word good. The youngster naturally goes on ignoring her forbidding as long as he can. Sometimes, he escapes final punishment by stopping when he hears the sound of her voice indicates the danger point.

Why will mothers make such fools of themselves? To me, it is exasperating to hear any mother repeat a forbidding which was clearly made. What irks me most is that the youngster must eventually pay a heavy penalty. Besides, it reveals a lack of integrity in the mother.

Learn Disobedience What is more, the child learns disobedience, and when at last he does surrender, he usually does so with great emotional resistance. He may be very unhappy and his mother may have been vexed beyond description.

I wish I might persuade the young mother rarely to say "No" or "Don't," but having said it, never to repeat it but to use instead an effective penalty at once. In those instances which will surely come up again and again, there should be no occasion for her ever to repeat a definite forbidding that was clearly made even weeks earlier.

Of course, she may discover that she had erred in uttering the forbidding. In this case she should tell the child she made an error and that she is sorry.

Punishment for Accidents Many a child is punished for an accident after the mother has allowed him to go on doing what she knew was pretty sure to lead to disaster. The tot, three, for example, is playfully pushing a glass of water beside his plate at the table. Seeing him do so, the mother can be pretty certain there will be a spill. She lets him continue till the glass turns over.

Then she makes a fuss over the accident, or even punishes him. She easily could have prevented the accident by forbidding him to push the glass the moment she saw him do so. If one quiet reminder did not deter him, she should have sent him from the table to sit alone for twenty minutes. That was the psychological moment.

Sometimes the accident itself proves too severe punishment. Two youngsters, five and three are wildly chasing each other through the house, the one opening and slamming the doors ahead of his pursuer. The mother does nothing to stop the roughhouse. Soon the fingers of the pursuing child are severely pinched in the door.

Many a tot will run away to dangerous places. Sometimes the outcome is tragic. In vain, this youngster may have spanked each time he was found and caught. The child was punished for being caught, not for running away; so he supposed. If the mother had used the sense she was born with, she would have let everything else go till the matter was settled permanently.

She would have defined clearly to the youngster the boundary beyond which he must not go. Then, always, when he was out-of-doors she should have been near him, so that when he crossed that boundary, she would spank or paddle him soundly right then and there. The psychological moment was when he crossed the line.
