Use Of Ladino Clover Encouraged In Haywood

Introduced to North Carolina during the war, Ladino clover has been found to be a successful dairy feed by the farmers of Haywood county who have grown it. Wayne Corpening, county agent, writes the following article on this crop and its use in this area.

Ladino clover, a giant form of common white clover, is rapidly becoming the foundation of an intensive grassland agriculture in this state. Experiments during the past five years have indicated that it will grow on areas where white clover is successful.

Several dairy farms in this vicinity have been using this clover with orchard grass for several years and there was as good a pasture of this combination last spring on the Biltmore Farm as can be seen anywhere in the state. There is a good demonstration at the Osborne Farm where Ladino clover is included in the pasture mixture. Everyone who went on this year's out-of-county farm tour will remember the Ladino clover pasture at the Mitchell Farm near Fletcher.

There are certain precautions that must be observed if this clover is to do its best job. Since it is taller growing than the ordinary white clover, it cannot be grazed as closely. It must be fertilized liberally. This includes adequate limestone, phosphate, and potash. It can either be substituted for white clover in the regular seeding mixtures for Haywood, or on acres ideally adapted to clover. Two or three pounds can be seeded with the perennial grasses and no other legumes included. It can be seeded the same way as white clover.

either in the fall or spring. If reseeding an established permanent pasture, it is best to scarify the ground with a disc harrow if possible; however, good results have been obtained by just seeding on the established pasture.

Ladino clover is a rapid-growing perennial legume, spreading by creeping fleshy stems that root at the nodes. Depending upon the favorableness of the soil, climate, and management, the leaves, stems, and flower heads of Ladino clover grow from two to four times as large as those of the English wild white clover.

The shape, color, and markings of the leaves and the shape and color of the flower heads of Ladino clover are similar to those of common white clover. Ordinarily Ladino does not flower so profusely as most other types of white clover. In more or less thin stands, or when young, the leaves are relatively far apart, giving an open appearance in the clover. In size and color Ladino clover seed is the same as that of other white clover.

Much of the feed problem for dairymen and beef cattlemen can be solved with good Ladino clover pastures. Arrangements have been made whereby this seed can be secured at local dealers. Every dairyman should plan now to seed some Ladino clover for pasture.

HONEY ON A TRAP

ROCKFORD, Ill.—Investigating a report that a booby trap had been placed in a chicken coop, two men from the sheriff's office found the box. One of the men nudged it gingerly with his foot, setting off a buzzing sound. Cautiously, the men turned the box over—it was a home-made beehive.

French Bride Recognizes Whistle, But Not Words

NEWTON — Marie Podhradsky Hewitt, native of Breigny, France, and recent bride of Joe Hewitt of Newton, Route 2, doesn't recognize all the words of the English language, but she knows right away what the two-toned appreciative whistle of the American soldier means.

Asked by a reporter about the American servicemen stationed in her home town after France was liberated, she stated that they were "very nice." When asked if they teased her, she was unable to understand what that word meant.

"Well, did they kid you?" she was asked. She still didn't understand. "Did they joke with you then?" Still she didn't understand.

"Well, look, did they go like this?"—the reporter puckered up and gave a whistle.

"Oh, yes," said Marie, her face lighting up with a delighted smile. "maybe too much so!"

GRIZZLIES ON RAMPAGE

KALISPEL, Mont.—Grizzly bears seem to be on a rampage in north-west Montana. One bear mauled a camper badly before it was killed by a rifle bullet. Another chased a forester into a tree and tore off his shoes. A small dog saved two hunters from an angry bear diverting the animal long enough to enable the men to climb nearby trees.

Alan Stinnett, and the grandmothers, Mrs. Katie Stinnett and Mrs. Patton, all of Canton.

Pallbearers were Benny, Ray, Weaver and Burder Patton, Clyde Stinnett and Gudgey Worley.

Wells Funeral Home was in charge of the arrangements.

A Word About NYLON HOSE...

The market on Nylon Hose has improved to the extent that we have discontinued registration for them. We now have sufficient stock for sales across the counter without the registration plan.

Since the two week period for holding hose for those who registered has expired we have put all nylons in stock.

We appreciate the co-operation given us while we tried to spread our stocks of Nylons to as many as possible. We too, are glad the time has come when the supply enables us to keep a stock on our shelves.
