

Livestock And Home Arts Show Praised Crowds With Fine Animals

The local farm agents asking details of how the show was conducted in order that they might pattern after the show.

The attendance five years ago went beyond all expectations, with over 12,000 reported attending the show. There were 3,000 the opening day, with 4,500 reported for the night and more than 4,500 on the second day.

Louise Heese of Pigeon, with her 1,000-pound Hereford steer won top honors among the 4-H group. The parade of the champions in the show made a great hit, it may be recalled.

On all sides was heard the remark, "Why, I didn't know there were so many fine cattle in Haywood county."

The exhibition of horse jumping on the afternoon of the closing day drew hundreds as the Bramlett horses from here and the Tate horses from Blowing Rock thrilled the big crowd.

Working to make the show a great success were three well-known county farm agents, two veterinarians and one still in Germany. Wayne Corpening, current county farm agent, who made history in Africa and Europe, John Reizel, now with the State Department of Extension, and Col. Jack Lynn, now serving in Germany with the U. S. Government.

One of the biggest things about the show were the home arts and crafts, with the canned goods that all visitors wanted to buy. Heard often was the question, "Are these for sale?" There was no sugar rationing then.

One reason the Haywood show of 1941 attracted so much attention was the fact that its entries of cattle were of the highest standard and its home arts and exhibitions were worthy of a state fair, but there were no gambling carnival features to take money out of the county. The amusements and entertainment were constructive. The 1941 show demonstrated that a successful county fair could be held without these features.

When the 1941 show closed all plans were in the making for a better show to be held in 1942, but world events intervened and not until this year was it feasible to attempt another show, which is expected to again attract thousands of people from the county and adjoining counties.

Considered One Of Best Beef Breeds Since Earliest Days

Native home of the famous Hereford breed of cattle is Herefordshire, a county in the west of England.

Here, in 1742, Benjamin Tomkins, the elder, is credited by many as the originator of the distinct Hereford breed, and his son, Benjamin Tomkins, the younger, carried on the program. Within 50 years the breed was pronounced "superior as beasts of draft and fattening at an early age," and butchers felt that no other type of beef cattle had as fine quality of meat or as little waste as in the Tomkins breeding.

An early historian remarked that "Herefordshire is also famous as a breeding country for its cattle of bright red hue, with mottled or white faces and sleek and silky coats. The Herefords are a stalwart and healthy breed and put on more meat and fat at an early age, in proportion to feed consumed, than almost any other variety. They produce the finished beef and are more cheaply fed than other breeds."

Henry Clay is said to be the first American to import this breed, purchasing a bull and two heifers in 1817. One of the earliest large importations was by W. H. Sotham, who in 1839 and 1840 brought 21 cows and heifers and a bull to his farm near Albany, N. Y. The eastern states became interested, and the Hereford herds spread until the Civil War curtailed trading.

After this the breed went further west and was popular in Canada, and the Hereford became accepted generally as a fine quality beef breed. Within the past half-century, Hereford breeders battled hard to get this acceptance in the cattle ranches of the West, but now it is looked on as the paramount breed and has helped to cause the gradual disappearance of the unfenced public ranges and brought on a breaking-up of the larger tracts of grazing land into farms and ranches.

The American Hereford association, formed in 1882, has been an organization of breeders and supporters of this type. Their membership extends into all states now, and there are 27 states—including North Carolina—who have more registered Hereford cattle than other beef breeds combined.

Interest in Haywood county has grown considerably within the past 20 years, and now many fine animals of that type are grown here. Supporters of the breed look to the Hereford to become more important here in future years.

Britain To Release Surplus Material For Sale To Italy

ROME—Britain is turning over surplus war material valued at $800,000,000 to the Italian government, it was stated here.

"The price has not yet been fixed, but in line with Britain's policy of giving Italy a helping hand it will be purely a nominal figure, considerably below the figure at which we valued the material," Brig. A. L. Nixon, Chief Disposal Officer, said here.

Some 350,000 types of equipment are being handed over, including tanks, guns, thousands of vehicles, rubber, and scrap metal. All war equipment, such as guns and tanks, is demilitarized before being handed over.

Brigadier Nixon said a similar agreement was being worked out with the French government.

Forest Warden Names Burning Permit Sources

R. E. Caldwell, forest warden of Haywood county, who is in charge of all fire fighting and other forestry activities in the county, is urging that the people of this area cooperate with him in his program and follow the rules worked out by the state and U. S. Forest service.

Mr. Caldwell attended the annual State Forest Warden's meeting for the western district held last week at Wilson Lake, where the various activities of the wardens was outlined. Considerable excitement occurred during the meeting when a bear raided the camp and tried to steal the provisions.

All persons who desire to burn trash, ditch banks, refuse or start a fire for any reason within an adjoining woodland are required by the state to obtain a burning permit. If the burning is done between Oct. 1 and November 30, and February 1 and June 1, it is pointed out by Mr. Caldwell.
