Stubble-Trouble Shooter Tips American Shaver

By CARLE HODGE AP Newsfeatures Writer

NEW YORK—David Goldman is a stubble-trouble expert. He has devoted his life—or at least the past seven years of it—to tracking down the cause and cure of bothersome shaving. Goldman has discovered that:

Weather and local water supplies can alter the tenacity of one's beard and thus, the effectiveness of a razor blade thereon.

The average American shaves once every 1 1/2 days.

It is possible if you're Jim Churchill of Charlottesville, W. Va., to shave in 61 seconds.

The U. S. uses 3 billion blades a year.

Goldman, tall, dapper and be-mustached, a onetime New York engineer, is employed by a blade manufacturer. His job, a mixture of research and public relations, is to glorify shaving in general—and to help make it as simple and painless as possible for the 55 million American men who undergo it.

It has taken him across 48 states where he not only has tested blades, soaps, razors, whiskers and waters in laboratories, but also has interviewed thousands of shavers.

He addresses men's clubs on the history ("the Romans shaved with sharp swords") and art of beard removal. He always starts such speeches with something like "I'm in a sharp business." It keeps him on edge.

On his trips he has found, among other things, that it is harder to shave with the Rocky Mountain region's hard water and that, although beards grow faster, it is easier to shave in such warm areas as Georgia and Alabama.

Manufacturers are answering that problem by turning out blades of varying thickness for different sections.

Last year, at Palisades Park, N. J., the shave expert directed the first annual shaver's race for the Berkeley trophy. Jim Churchill, the West Virginia merchant seaman, won by cleaning off whiskers in 1 minute, 1 second.

Goldman urges shavers: Check the direction of your beard growth every man's is different) and shave in the opposite direction.

Avoid conversation while shaving.

Your razor blade has four beveled sharp sides, NOT TWO. Save money; turn the blade over and use it again.

Don't read the morning paper while shaving.
