Are "schedules" for babies going out of fashion?

Answer: Very much so. In fact, "scientific" as the idea of a baby's living by the clock may have seemed, its real appeal was to the convenience of those who had to take care of him. Babies left to "cry it out" when they are hungry, rold, or in pain get a dangerous in pression that the world is hearttess or unfriendly. As Dr. Edith Jackson says: "The capacity for self-discipline is rooted in early emotional satisfaction," not fear and frustration. Parents should "let the child teach them" his needs, not rely on theories.
