ing alive, it was reported, but failed to respond to artificial respiration. Six of the nine dead were housed on the top floor and apparently burned to death.

The steel bars and chains put on the building's windows to prevent patients from escaping did their job effectively. Fire-fighters had to chop through the strong shackles before they could get some of the trapped patients outside.

All of Asheville's fire equipment raced to the holocaust, along with engines from Enka and Biltmore. Within two hours the fire was practically extinguished.

Witnesses say most of the 29 patients in the building were asleep when the fire broke out. Some of the patients walked out calmly.

Only a bare, sooty shell of the hospital remains. There is nothing left of the inside of the structure, and only three of the stone and brick walls are standing.

H. F. MacFayden, business manager of the hospital and former manager of the Waynesville Country Club, reported that more than $6,000 in food stocks was destroyed.

MORE ABOUT Park Funds

Mountains National Park area combined forces last fall in the naming of a two-state committee to outline proposed improvements and to request the necessary funds to see the long-range program through.

At that time, the committee agreed to seek funds to pay the salaries of more naturalists and more rangers for the park, to provide additional housing for rangers, and to employ additional maintenance workers.

The improvement funds, it was understood, would be in addition to the yearly appropriation made to the National Park Service for park administration purposes.
