Hollywood Film Shop

HOLLYWOOD (UP) — Producer Harry Sherman thinks American moviegoers are ready for grown-up Westerns.

He doesn't mean the wild-riding, rough-shooting sagas. He means pictures about the men tempted by the lawlessness of the frontier who lived to become respectable citizens.

"The killing of such outlaws as Billy the Kid has long overshadowed the greater dramas of those hunted men who later became leaders and turned the Territory of New Mexico into statehood," Sherman said.

"Those stories are found on every frontier, and they have been untouched by the movie industry."

Sherman has produced 136 pictures in which the only solution to a life of crime was death. "They Passed This Way," his 157th for Enterprise, offers his new solution.

No Shots Fired

Not a single shot is fired in "They Passed This Way." This, in Hollywood, is as revolutionary as the Einstein theory.

"I'm not afraid to try something new," Sherman said, "when I know the public intelligence is up to accepting it."

He has been doing a lot of pulse feeling on the public, visiting exchanges and exhibitors and exchanging endless correspondence, as well as talking to people who come out of movies after seeing western films.

The conversations convinced him that nobody would object to a change.

Sherman started one of the most popular westerns on the screen today, the Hopalong Cassidy series. They're hard to beat when it comes to the gun battle, tavern brawl, cattle stampede formula.

"Only the public can tell me whether it's ready for another kind of western," Sherman said. "But at least they won't forget our picture because it dares to be different."

CHICAGO'S TREES VANISHING

CHICAGO (UP) — The city is losing its trees at the rate of 700 a month. Walter C. Wright, superintendent of the bureau of parks, recreation and aviation, estimated that more than 400,000 trees should be planted to replace those cut down by the city.

Timely Farm Questions

Question: Give me some advice on covering my tobacco plant bed.

Answer: Cloth with about 24 x 28 threads per inch is best. If the cloth is boiled for 30 minutes between seasons, it may be used a number of times.

The bed may be covered lightly with a uniform application of well-threshed wheat straw, about 15 to 20 pounds per 100 square yards. Heavy applications of straw are not desired. The straw is never removed from the bed and the canvas is placed directly on the straw and pegged to the ground around the edges. The straw acts as a mulch and keeps the cloth from sticking to the ground after rains.

If the sides are to be boxed in with boards or poles, a good insect tight job should be done. Otherwise, there seems to be little justification for the cost of the boards and this operation. The dirt can be packed against the boards or poles to aid in making tight the sides. After rains, surface drainage may be aided by opening holes along the sides. The side boards should not be higher than 6 to 8 inches.

For permanent bed locations, growers may prefer concrete blocks or some other such material. Where permanent sites are established, beds should be wide enough and open at the ends to permit the use of a disc and other equipment. Wickets or sticks made from hardwood switches may be stuck in the ground here and there over the bed. Bottles or tin cans may be inverted or capped over stakes driven into the ground. Galvanized smooth wire may be stretched across the bed and fastened to the side boards, about every 12 to 15 feet. Rusty wire must not be used as it will cause the cloth to split.

Question: How can I remove warts from my cattle?

Answer: Warts can generally be removed by keeping them soft by daily applications of castor oil or sweet oil. Daily applications of glacial acetic acid or tincture of iodine are also used for the removal of small warts. Extremely large ones should be removed surgically by a veterinarian.

Figures based on U. S. government specifications for an adequate diet indicate that such a diet for every American would have cost $17.5 billion in 1940 compared with actual expenditures of $16.4 billion by the American people for food in that year.
