Americans Wanted To Make Study Of Russian

Need For Quarter Million U. S. Students Of Language Is Advanced

By DAVID TAYLOR MARKE AP Newsfeatures Writer On Education

NEW YORK—Some 250,000 native Americans are wanted to study Russian. Those interested should apply to the American Association of Teachers of Slavic and East European Languages.

According to the latest estimates of the AATSEEL, no more than 35,000 Americans of every category will study Russian during the academic year 1947-48.

"Yet," says AATSEEL, "from estimates arrived at through conference with leaders of industry, education and the Armed Forces, there is a need at present for at least 50,000 persons who can handle Russian effectively. To meet this need, at least a quarter of a million Americans ought right now be studying Russian."

A "National Emergency" This need "amounts to a national emergency," says Dr. Arthur Prudden Coleman, assistant professor, department of Slavic Languages, Columbia University. "Russian should be added to the list of foreign languages studied in every large high school in the country."

Dr. Coleman, who is secretary of AATSEEL, has just issued a report on the status of Russian and other Slavic and East European languages in the educational institutions of the United States, its territories, possessions and mandates, with additional data on similar studies in Canada and Latin America.

Colleges and universities have done their part in the promotion of the study of Russian in this country, Dr. Coleman says.

"By late 1946, the interest in Slavic and East European studies in our colleges and universities had become very great, but still the languages showed no signs of penetrating to the high schools, where, as it was clearly foreseen, they would have to be accepted if college and university work in the field was to be of the level of that in other modern languages," he says.

High School Objections High school administrators are reluctant to introduce Russian because of the expense involved, says Dr. Coleman, adding:

"A more serious objection is, would the language be accepted for entrance credit by colleges and universities—and incidentally also by medical schools—which the student might later wish to attend?"

A study of 236 institutions on the collegiate level shows that under proper conditions full credit would be given Russian for admission, Dr. Coleman reports.

The "proper conditions," he says, were that Russian language should have been taken in an accredited high school and in a class conducted by a certified teacher, under the same conditions as if the language offered were German or French or Spanish.

Of the medical schools studied, nearly a third are ready to accept Russian language credits at face value. Many schools of theology and law will do the same, he says.
